PREFATORY NOTE

IT is a matter of great regret to me that illness, pressure of other duties and the excessive size of this volume have caused me to abandon the plan of discussing in Appendices E to M some of the historical problems connected with Ant. XII-XIV, as has been done in Appendices B, C and D. In place of detailed discussions I have given selected bibliographies. I hope to deal with these problems in a work on the history of the Jews during the period of the Second Commonwealth, which should appear some time after the completion of the last volume of this translation of Josephus.

(i. 1) <sup>a</sup> HAVING overthrown the Persian empire and settled the affairs of Judaea in the manner described above, Alexander, the king of Macedon, died.<sup>b</sup> And his empire fell to the share of many, Antigonus becoming master of Asia, and Seleucus of Babylon and the nations thereabouts, while Lysimachus ruled the Hellespont, Cassander held Macedon, and Ptolemy, the son of Lagus, took Egypt.<sup>c</sup> But, as these quarrelled and fought jealously with one another, each for his own kingdom, the result was that continual and prolonged wars arose, and the cities suffered through their struggles and lost many of their inhabitants, so that all of Syria at the hands of Ptolemy, the son of Lagus, who was then called Soter (Saviour),<sup>d</sup> suffered the reverse of that which was indicated by his surname. And this king seized Jerusalem by resorting to cunning and deceit. For he entered the city on the Sabbath as if to sacrifice, and, as the Jews did not oppose him—for they did not suspect any hostile act—and, because of their lack of suspicion and the nature of the day, were enjoying idleness and ease, he became master of the city without difficulty and ruled it harshly. This account is attested by Agatharchides of Cnidus, the historian of the Diadochi, who reproaches us for our superstition,<sup>a</sup> on account of which we lost our liberty, in these words.<sup>b</sup> “There is a nation called Jews, who have a strong and great city called Jerusalem, which they allowed to fall into the hands of Ptolemy by refusing to take up arms and, instead, through their untimely superstition submitted to having a hard master.” This, then, was the opinion which Agatharchides expressed about our nation. Now Ptolemy, after taking many captives both from the hill country of Judaea and the district round Jerusalem and from Samaria and those on Garizein,<sup>c</sup> brought them all to Egypt and settled them there.<sup>d</sup> And, as he recognized that the people of Jerusalem were most constant in keeping their oaths and pledges, as shown by the reply which they gave to Alexander when he sent an embassy to them after defeating Darius in battle, he assigned many of them to his garrisons, and at Alexandria gave them equal <sup>d</sup> This information is taken in part from the Letter of Aristeas, on which see § 11 note b, but the following sentence on the reply made by the Jews to the envoys of Alexander and on the alleged civic rights of the Jews is not found in Arist. The date of the settlement of Ptolemy's captives in Egypt is not known; perhaps it was after the battle of Gaza between Ptolemy and Demetrius Poliorcetes in 312 B.C.

<sup>a</sup> The historicity of Josephus' various references to the civic rights of Alexandrian Jews will be discussed in an appendix to the last volume of this translation.

<sup>b</sup> This statement is ascribed to Hecataeus of Abdera in Ap. i. 186 f., who is quoted as saying that after the battle of Gaza many of the inhabitants of Syria ( = Palestine), "hearing of his kindness and humanity (τὴν ἡπιότητα καὶ φιανθρωπίαν), desired to accompany him to Egypt and to associate themselves with his realm," and that among these was "Ezechias, a chief priest (ἀρχιερεὺς) of the Jews." The authenticity of these quotations from Hecataeus is defended by (among others) H. Lewy, (cf. Ant. xi. 339 note) and A. Olmstead, who writes in the Journal of the American Oriental Society, lvi., 1936, p. 244, "So long as this was the only reference to Ezechias, its authenticity might be denied, but by his excavations at Beth Zur Professor Sellers has given us civic rights with the Macedonians <sup>a</sup> and exacted oaths of them that they would keep faith with the descendants of him who had placed them in a position of trust. But not a few of the other Jews as well came to Egypt of their own accord, for they were attracted by the excellence of the country and Ptolemy's liberality.<sup>b</sup> Their descendants, however, had quarrels with the Samaritans because they were determined to keep alive their fathers' way of life and customs, and so they fought with each other, those from Jerusalem saying that their temple was the holy one, and requiring that the sacrifices be sent there, while the Shechemites <sup>c</sup> wanted these to go to Mount Garizein.

another witness, again contemporary, a Philisto-Arabian coin with the names of Jehohanan and Hezekiah in Hebrew [O. R. Sellers, Citadel of Beth Zur, 1933, pp. 73 ff.]. Jehohanan is Honnai or Onias I, the true high priest, Hezekiah or Ezechias is a high priest, his chief financial officer, what the Greeks called διοικητής, who naturally placed his name also on the coins he minted. With this unexpected proof that Hecataeus knew more than his critics, we are constrained to accept his other statements, that Jewish soldiers were taken to Egypt by Ptolemy I, given some sort of modified citizenship, and granted lands under military tenure." For detailed discussions of Jewish settlements in Egypt in the early Hellenistic period cf. L. Fuchs, Die Juden Aegyptens, 1924, pp. 5 f., and A. <sup>b</sup> Here begins Josephus' close paraphrase of the so-called Letter of Aristeas, a Hellenistic Jewish apologetic work, probably written sometime in the 2nd century B.C. The English reader may conveniently consult the following translations (with notes): H. St. J. Thackeray in the Jewish Quarterly Review, xv., 1903, pp. 337-391, also in a separate volume, revised, 1928; M. Andrews in CAP ii. 83-122; H. Meecham, The Oldest Version of the Bible, 1932. thirty-nine years <sup>a</sup> : and he had the Law translated <sup>b</sup> and released from slavery some hundred and twenty thousand <sup>c</sup> natives of Jerusalem who were slaves in Egypt, for the following reason. Demetrius of Phalerum, <sup>d</sup> who was in charge of the king's library, was anxious to collect, if he could, all the books in the inhabited world, and, if he heard of, or saw, any book worthy of study, he would buy it : and so he endeavoured to meet the wishes of the king, for he was very much devoted to the art of book-collecting. Now, when Ptolemy once asked him how many tens of thousands of books he had already gathered together, he replied that the present number was about two hundred thousand but that within a short time he would assemble some five hundred thousand. He added that he had been informed that among the Jews also there were many works on their law, which were worthy of study and of a place in the king's library, but, being written in the script and language of this people, they would be no small trouble to have translated into the Greek tongue. For, he said, though their script seemed to be similar to the peculiar Syrian (Aramaic) writing, and their language to sound like the other, it was, as it happened, of a Stählin, Josephus und der Aristeasbrief in Theologische Studien und Kritiken, ciii., 1930, pp. 323-331. Josephus reproduces about one-third of his original, the chief omissions being Arist. §§ 82-171 and §§ 187-292.

He came to Egypt in 297 B.C. and was employed in state affairs by Ptolemy I, but was dismissed and banished by Ptolemy Philadelphus soon after his accession to the throne. Arist.'s account of him is therefore fictitious.

There was, however, nothing, he said, to prevent them from having these books translated and having the writings of this people also in their library, for he <sup>a</sup> had abundant resources from which to meet the expense. And so the king, deciding that Demetrius had given him excellent advice as to how to realize his ambition of obtaining <sup>b</sup> a large number of books, wrote to the high priest of the Jews that this might be done.

(2) Now a certain Aristaeus,<sup>c</sup> who was one of the king's closest friends and was respected by him for his discreet behaviour,<sup>d</sup> had even before this often made up his mind to urge the king to set free the Jewish captives throughout his kingdom, and, judging this to be a favourable moment for his request, he first spoke of it to the commanders of the bodyguard, Sosibius of Tarentum <sup>e</sup> and Andreas,<sup>f</sup> and urged them to second his efforts in the matter on which he was about to petition the king. And so, when he had secured the assent of the forementioned men, Aristaeus went to the king and addressed him in the following words. "We ought not, O King, to allow ourselves to be deceived, but to show the truth as it is;

Better known is the Sosibius mentioned by Polybius, xv. 25 ff., as the ψευδεπίτροπος of Ptolemy Philopator, cf. Bevan, pp. 220 ff.; his son, also named Sosibius, was a member of the bodyguard of Ptolemy Epiphanes. For other persons of this name living in Egypt cf. Tramontano's note ad loc.

for, since we have decided not only to transcribe <sup>a</sup> the laws of the Jews but also to translate them for your pleasure, by what right should we do this while so many Jews are slaves in your kingdom? In accordance, therefore, with your magnanimity and goodness set them free from their misery, since the God who gave them their laws is the same who presides over your kingdom, as I have succeeded in learning after much study. For both they and we worship the God who created the universe, whom we call by the appropriate term Zēna,<sup>b</sup> giving Him that name from the fact that He breathes life (zēn) into all creatures.<sup>c</sup> Do you, then, for the honour of God restore (their freedom) to those who worship Him with peculiar devotion but have been deprived of their native land and the manner of life which they led there.<sup>d</sup> You should, however, know, O King, that it is not because I am related to them by race or am their countryman that I ask these things on their behalf, but I urge you to do this because all men are the handiwork of God,

F. Wutz, Die Transkriptionen von der Septuaginta bis zu Hieronymus, Pt. I, 1925, to mean "transliterate," that is, to transcribe the Hebrew text in Greek characters (as in Origen's Hexaplar). Proceeding on this assumption, Wutz attempts to prove that the Septuagint is a translation made not from a Hebrew text in Hebrew characters, but from a Hebrew text in Greek characters. This theory (first proposed by Tychsen in the 18th century) is generally rejected by scholars, rightly so in the opinion of the present writer.

(3) When Aristaeus had spoken these words, the king looked at him with a cheerful and happy expression, and asked, “ How many tens of thousands to be set free do you suppose there will be ? ” And when Andreas, who was standing beside him, replied that there would be a little more than a hundred and ten thousand,<sup>b</sup> the king said, “ It is indeed but a small gift that you are asking, Aristaeus.” But Sosibius and the others present said that he ought to make a thank-offering worthy of his own magnanimity to God who had bestowed the kingdom on him, and so, being gently persuaded by them, he gave orders that, when they paid the soldiers their wages, they should also pay them a hundred and twenty drachmas <sup>c</sup> for every captive they had. And, as for what they<sup>d</sup> requested, he promised to publish a decree conceived in liberal terms and giving effect to the proposal of Aristaeus and, what was more, the will of God, in accordance with which he said that he would set free not only those brought by his father and his army, but also those who had previously been found in the kingdom and any who were subsequently brought in. And although they said that the cost of redeeming them would be more than four hundred talents,<sup>e</sup> he

When this edict was read over to the king, it contained all the other provisions but omitted the directions concerning the Jews who had previously or subsequently been brought into the country, and so he himself magnanimously added his humane instructions concerning them as well; and as the money for expenses <sup>b</sup> was to be paid out as a lump sum, he ordered it to be apportioned between the officials of the government <sup>c</sup> and the royal bankers.<sup>d</sup> When this was done, the decree of the king was quickly carried out in just seven days, and the redemption-money came to more than four hundred and sixty <sup>e</sup> talents, for the slave-holders collected the hundred and twenty <sup>f</sup> drachmas even for infants, as if the king had commanded that payment should be made for these too, when he announced that they should receive the forementioned sum for each slave.<sup>g</sup> everything was done with great care. Therefore a copy of the memorial and of the letters has been set down here, as well as the number of the dedicatory offerings sent (to Jerusalem) and the workmanship of each, so that the great skilfulness of the craftsman may be quite clear to any who sees this account <sup>a</sup> and that the artificer of each may become known for the outstanding quality of his work. Now, as for the copy of the memorial, it read as follows: "To the great king from Demetrius. You have commanded, O King, that the writings which are still wanting to complete the library shall be collected and that those which are imperfect shall be given the necessary care, wherefore I have taken pains in this matter, and I wish to inform you that we still lack, among others, the books of the Jewish legislation.<sup>b</sup> For being written in Hebrew characters and in the language of that nation they are unintelligible to us. And it so happens that they have been copied <sup>c</sup> with less care than they needed,<sup>d</sup> because they have not yet been made an object of royal concern. But it is necessary that these too should be found among your books in an emended form, for their legislation is very wise and pure as a result of coming from God. For this reason, <sup>c</sup> The exact meaning of σεσήμανται in Arist., which Josephus has taken over in the infin. σεσημάνθαι, is a matter of dispute. Some scholars take it to mean "interpreted" and think it refers to previous Greek translations of the Pentateuch, cf. Z. Frankel, Vorstudien zu der Septuaginta, 1841, p. 61, note k. It seems clear from the context, however, that it refers to Hebrew mss. of the Pentateuch which have been carelessly copied from an original scroll (presumably kept in the Temple at Jerusalem).

Hecataeus of Abdera<sup>a</sup> tells us, the poets and historians have made no mention of it or of the men whose lives have been governed by it, on the ground that it was sacred and not to be revealed by profane mouths. If, then, O King, it be your pleasure, write to the high priest of the Jews to send six elders from each tribe who are most versed in their laws, in order that when we have learned from them the clear and consistent meaning of these and obtained an accurate translation, we may have a collection of these books which shall be worthy of their contents and of your design."

(5) Such, then, was the memorial, and, when it was submitted, the king ordered a letter to be written about these matters to Eleazar, the high priest of the Jews, informing him, at the same time, of the release of the Jewish slaves in their country; and for the making of mixing-bowls, shallow bowls and libation bowls he sent fifty talents' weight of gold<sup>b</sup> and an incalculable number of precious stones. He also ordered the keepers of the chests in which the stones lay to leave to the craftsmen themselves the choice of whatever kind they wished. He also directed that money to the amount of one hundred talents be given to the priest<sup>c</sup> for sacrifices and other necessities. Now I shall describe the objects and the form of their

was a contemporary of Ptolemy I (cf. Dr. Thackeray's note on Ap. i. 183), or a Hellenistic Jewish pseudepigraph, ("Pseudo-Hecataeus") has long been disputed. H. But as he, when he died, left an infant son named Onias, his brother Eleazar, of whom we are now writing, took over the high priesthood, and it was to him that Ptolemy wrote in the following manner.

"King Ptolemy to Eleazar the high priest, greeting. There are many Jews settled in my kingdom who were made captives by the Persians when they were in power and whom my father honoured, enrolling some of them in his army with high pay, and entrusting to others, who came to Egypt with him, the guarding of the fortresses<sup>b</sup> in order that they might inspire the Egyptians with fear<sup>c</sup>; and, when I took over the royal power, I showed kindness to all men, especially to your fellow-citizens,<sup>d</sup> of whom I have set free over one hundred thousand captive slaves,<sup>e</sup> paying their owners the redemption-money out of my own purse. Those who were in the prime of life I enrolled in the army list, and on others, who might be of service to us and occupy positions of trust at court,<sup>a</sup> I have conferred this honour in the belief that I should thus be making a welcome and also very considerable offering to God in return for His providential care of me. Being also desirous to confer a favour both on these Jews and on all those throughout the habitable world, I have decided to have your Law translated and, when it has been rendered from the Hebrew into a Greek text,<sup>b</sup> to have it deposited in my library. You will, therefore, do well to select<sup>c</sup> from each tribe six good men of advanced age who by reason of their age are well versed in the laws and will be able to make an accurate translation of it. For I believe that from this achievement the greatest glory will accrue to us. And I have sent Andreas, the commander of the bodyguard, and Aristaeus—men whom I hold in the greatest honour—to discuss these matters with you, and by their hands I have also sent dedicatory offerings as first-fruits<sup>d</sup> for the temple, and one hundred talents of silver for sacrifices and other purposes.

p. 164, that Arist. is in part based on 1 Macc. Other parallels to the phrase in Arist. are cited by Tramontano in his note ad loc.

<sup>b</sup> γράμμασι here (and in Arist.) means, of course, "literature" not "letters" (i.e. characters). This passage is therefore no support for the transcription theory of Wutz, cf. § 20 note a.

If you and Queen Arsinoe <sup>a</sup> and your children <sup>b</sup> are in good health, all is well with us. On receiving your letter we were greatly pleased with your proposal, and gathering together the people, we read it to them and made plain to them the piety which you show toward God. (7) This, then, was the high priest's reply. But I have not thought it necessary to report the names of the seventy <sup>b</sup> elders who were sent by Eleazar and brought the Law, their names being set down at the end of the letter. <sup>c</sup> However, as for the magnificence and workmanship of the dedicatory offerings which the king sent to the temple of God, I have thought it not inappropriate to describe them, in order that the king's eagerness to honour God may be apparent to all. For the king gave unlimited sums to be spent for these gifts and was constantly with the craftsmen, and looking over their work, did not allow any of the objects to be carelessly or indifferently made. How magnificent each of these was I shall describe, although perhaps my History does not call for such an account, because I believe that in this way I shall bring home to my readers the king's love of art and his magnanimity.

(8) First of all I shall give a description of the table. Now the king had in mind to make this object of unusually large dimensions, and he gave orders to learn the size of the table which was set up (in the temple) at Jerusalem, to see how large it was and whether it was possible for a larger one than this to be constructed. And when he learned what the size of the existing table was and that there was nothing to prevent a larger one being made, he said that he would like to construct one as much as five times as large as the one there, but was afraid that it might be of no use in the temple ministrations because of its excessive size, for it was his wish to make dedicatory-offerings not merely for show but also to be of use in the temple ministrations ; it was for that reason, he reflected, that the former table had been constructed of moderate proportions, and not through lack of gold ; and so he decided not to go beyond the existing table in size, but to construct one more remarkable for the variety and beauty of its materials. And, as he was clever in understanding the nature of all sorts of things and devising new and wonderful objects, he himself, where there were no written directions,<sup>a</sup> furnished a design of his own invention and, after explaining it to the craftsmen, ordered them to make these objects, and, where there were written directions, he ordered the men to follow these exactly and complete their work similarly.

description remains obscure in many places. The notes following are meant chiefly to clarify the relation of Josephus' text to that of Arist. : for fuller explanations of the architectural or decorative details the reader should consult the commentaries on Arist.

<sup>c</sup> Other translators of Josephus render ἐποσπιδάμενοι merely by "having undertaken" (to make), neglecting its special sense "to make something after a model," and by placing a comma before κατεσκεύασαν, leave this verb as a needless doublet of ποιούμενοι.

Moreover they wrought a rim of a hand-breadth and twisted wave-mouldings carved in low relief of a rope-design, of which the modelling was a marvellously faithful imitation, on all three surfaces. For these (rims) were triangular, and each angle had the same pattern worked in it, so that, when they were turned, the same form without any difference appeared on every surface. Now, on the rim, the side sloping down toward<sup>c</sup> the table had lovely modelling, but the side turned outwards was adorned with even greater beauty of workmanship, since it came under the eye of the spectator. For that reason the upper edge, where the two surfaces met, was an acute angle, and no one angle, of which there were three, as we have said before, appeared less than the others when the table was carried round. And in the coils of the relief-work were set precious stones, one beside another, and they were secured with gold pins by which they were pierced. The side of the rim which slanted upward to meet the eye was ornamented with an egg-pattern made of most beautiful stone resembling in its carving the continuous flutings which ran all round the table. And below the egg-modelling the craftsmen set round a wreath on which were carved in relief the likenesses of all kinds of fruit, so that clusters of grapes hung down and ears the dimension of width is omitted in the mss. of Arist. itself, probably through an oversight.

<sup>c</sup> Conjectured; mss. "turning out"; Arist. has τὸ μὲν εἰς αὐτὴν τὴν τράπεζαν ἀπόκλιμα. The nature of the rim is puzzling; Dr. Thackeray, in his translation of Arist., helpfully suggests that it was a "triangular rotatory bar crowning the border and turning on pivots at the corner."

of grain stood up and pomegranates were inclosed.<sup>a</sup> And they fashioned stones for every species of the above-mentioned fruits, so that each was represented in its own colour, and they fastened them to the gold <sup>b</sup> round the whole table. Similarly, below the wreath another egg-pattern was made, and flutings were carved in low relief, the table being constructed with the same appearance of variety of workmanship and elegance on both ends,<sup>c</sup> so that, even when the table was turned the other way there was no difference in the two wave-mouldings and rims, but the same form of decoration extended right down to the feet. For they made a plate of gold four fingers wide along the whole width of the table, into which they set the feet and then fastened them to the table near the rim by pins and clamps, in order that, on whichever side the table was placed, they might present the same appearance of original workmanship and costliness. On the table itself <sup>d</sup> they carved a meander, in the midst of which they set valuable stones of various forms like stars,<sup>e</sup> such as the ruby and emerald, each of which sparkled most delightfully to the eye, and other kinds of stones which are most sought after and desired for their precious quality. Next to the meander was carried round a network of rope-design,<sup>f</sup> with a central panel shaped like a lozenge, into which were pressed stones of crystal and amber, and these by their appearance of regular alternation <sup>a</sup> afforded a wonderfully attractive sight to behold. As for the feet, they had capitals made to imitate unfolding lilies, with their petals bent back under the table, while within they held their stamens erect to be seen. And they had a base made of ruby a hand-breadth high, which presented the appearance of a pedestal <sup>b</sup>; it was eight fingers wide, and on it the whole shaft <sup>c</sup> of the foot rested. They also carved each of the feet in relief with most delicate and painstaking modelling, creating ivy and vine-branches and clusters of grapes, so that one would suppose they were not other than real. For, as they moved in the wind because of their lightness and fine-edged tenuousness, they gave the appearance of natural things rather than of artificial imitations. The workmen also showed originality in constructing the whole table in the form <sup>d</sup> of a triptych, the parts being so smoothly held together that the places where they were joined could not be seen or even suspected. And the thickness of the table was no less than half a cubit. And so this dedicatory-offering was finished, such being the preciousness of its material and the variety of ornament and the imitative skill of the craftsmen in modelling, in accordance with the great munificence of the king, for he was eager to produce a table which, if it was not to be greater in size than were admirable in their craft, but much more through the zeal and munificence of the king, for not only did he furnish the craftsmen with a lavish and generous abundance of material, but he also gave up attending to public affairs and himself came to see the artisans and supervised the whole work. This was the reason for the craftsmen's diligence, for, taking an example from the king and the zeal shown by him, they applied themselves to their tasks with greater will to labour.

(11)<sup>a</sup> These, then, were the dedicatory-offerings sent to Jerusalem by Ptolemy. Now Eleazar, the high priest, after dedicating them to God and honouring the bearers, gave them gifts to take to the king, and sent them back to the king. And when they came to Alexandria, and Ptolemy heard of their arrival and of the coming of the seventy<sup>b</sup> elders, he at once sent for Andreas and Aristaeus, his envoys. Accordingly, when they came, they delivered to him the letters which they had brought him from the high priest, and reported to him all that the high priest had suggested that they should convey by word of mouth.<sup>c</sup> Thereupon, being eager to meet the elders who had come from Jerusalem to translate the laws, he gave orders to dismiss any others who might be present on official business, thereby doing something very unusual and contrary to custom. For those who were brought by such reasons used to come before him on the fifth day, while envoys were admitted after a month. On this occasion, however,

<sup>a</sup> I. Abrahams remarks, Jewish Quarterly Review, xiv., 1902, p. 340, "there is some rabbinic confirmation that the χρυσογραφία ['writing in gold'] . . . was associated with the scrolls of the law used in Alexandria. The statement in Aristeas confuses the whole ms. with the divine name. The name of God (according to Tract. Sophirim, i. 10) was so written in an Alexandrian codex."

' This psychological explanation is added by Josephus.

he dismissed these people and awaited those who had been sent by Eleazar. Now when the elders came with the gifts which the high priest had given them to take to the king and with the leather skins on which the laws were written in letters of gold,<sup>a</sup> he questioned them about these books. So they unrolled the wrappings and showed them to him, whereupon the king marvelled at the fineness of the membranes and the impossibility of telling where they were joined, so well were they fitted together; and, having done so for a long while, he said that he was thankful to them for coming, and more so to him who had sent them, but most of all to God, whose laws these were. Then both the elders and the others present cried out with one voice to wish the king happiness, at which he burst into tears through excess of pleasure, since it is natural for great joy to be expressed by the same signs as grief.<sup>b</sup> He then ordered the books to be given to those in charge of the records,<sup>c</sup> and only then did he greet the men, saying that it was right for him first to speak of the things for which he had summoned them and then to address them. He promised, moreover, that he would make a special occasion of the day on which they had come to him and would celebrate it every year so long as he lived, for, he said, the day of their coming happened to be the same as that of the victory

<sup>a</sup> τὰ βιβλία δοῦναι τοῖς ἐπὶ τῆς τάξεως in Josephus corresponds to εἰς τάξιν ἀποδοῦναι τὰ τεύχη in Arist., which is generally translated "put the rolls back in their place" or "in order." Other scholars assume that Josephus has misunderstood this phrase, but his interpretation may be correct; cf. the phrase τὰ τῆς τάξεως βιβλία cited from the papyri by F. Preisigke, Fachwörter des öffentlichen Verwaltungsdienstes Aegyptens, 1915, p. 169, and translated by him as "die Akten" ("official records").

<sup>a</sup> If this is a reference to the battle of Cos c. 258 B.C. (for the date see the chronological note of W. Tarn in CAH vii. 862), it is an error or a deliberate correction of history, for Ptolemy Philadelphus was decisively defeated by Antigonus Gonatas in that battle. No other naval battle between these two rulers is known to us. Some years later there was a naval battle at Andros between a Ptolemy and an Antigonos, but it is not certain whether the Ptolemy was Philadelphus or his successor Euergetes, or whether the Antigonos was Gonatas or his successor Doson, or finally whether the battle was a victory or a defeat for the Egyptians. Moreover,

(12) Accordingly Nicanor, who was the officer in charge of the reception of guests, <sup>c</sup> called Dorotheus, who took care of these matters, and told him to prepare whatever food was required by each. Now these matters were arranged by the king in the following way : for each city that had its own <sup>d</sup> habits of diet there was a person who looked after these and prepared all food for visitors in accordance with their customs, in order that they might have their usual kind of fare at the banquet-table, and so have the more pleasure and not take offence at anything to which they might be unaccustomed. And this is just what was done in their case, Dorotheus being put in charge of these matters because of his exactness in the details of living. <sup>e</sup> He therefore spread out <sup>f</sup> all the materials at his disposal for such receptions, and had the couches divided into two rows, Arsinoë II is assumed in Arist. to have been alive at the time of this victory, and neither battle was fought before 269 B.C., when she died ; cf. Bevan, Ptol. p. 68, and Tramontano, p. 113 (with literature).

<sup>b</sup> The Jews of Alexandria lived near the royal palace or citadel (cf. Dr. Thackeray's note to Ap. ii. 33), in the north-eastern part of the city by the sea. The Palestinian elders, therefore, were appropriately lodged there.

the king having so commanded : for he had ordered that half the guests should recline beside him and the others behind his own couch,<sup>a</sup> thus neglecting nothing in which he might show them honour. And when they had been seated in this manner, he told Dorotheus to serve them after the fashion to which all those who had come to him from Judaea were accustomed. He therefore dispensed with the sacred heralds and sacrificers and the others who used to offer prayers, but, instead, the king called upon one of the visitors, named Elissaeus,<sup>b</sup> who was a priest, to offer prayer. And so he stood in their midst and prayed for the happiness of the king and his subjects. Thereupon applause and cries of joy arose from all sides, and, when they had done, they turned to feasting and enjoying the good things that had been prepared. But the king, after waiting for what seemed a sufficiently long time, began to philosophize and asked each one of them about problems of nature,<sup>c</sup> and when, after considering the questions, they gave precise explanations concerning every single problem suggested to them for discussion, he was delighted with them and made the banquet last for twelve <sup>d</sup> days, so that anyone who wishes to find out the details of the questions discussed at the banquet can learn them by reading the book which Aristaeus composed on this account.<sup>a</sup>

mean "at his left," since it was the custom to recline on the left arm, and so those seated at the king's left would be somewhat behind him. Chamonard, however, renders the second phrase by "à une table placée derrière la sienne."

(13)<sup>b</sup> Now it was not only the king who admired them, but also the philosopher Menedemus,<sup>c</sup> who said that all things were governed by providence, and it is natural that through it power and beauty of speech are discovered<sup>d</sup>; after this they left off inquiring into these problems. Then the king said that he had already experienced the greatest of blessings through their being there, for he had profited by learning from them how he ought to reign, and he ordered that each of them should be given three talents and have attendants to take them back to their lodgings.<sup>e</sup> After an interval of three days Demetrius took them with him and, after walking seven stades<sup>f</sup> along the sea-embankment to the island<sup>g</sup> and crossing over by the bridge, proceeded to the north side and called a meeting in a house which had been built near the shore and was excellently fitted for the consideration of serious matters because it was so quiet there. And so he brought them there and requested them, since they had everything they might need for the translation of the law, to carry out their task without interruption. Thereupon they set to work as am-

<sup>b</sup> From this sentence (in the corresponding passage in Arist., §§ 301 ff.) it appears that the translators spent the late afternoon and evening at or near Ptolemy's palace, and after paying their respects at court every morning, left for the island of Pharos (for ἀπήεσαν, "went back," Arist. has ἀπελύοντο, "were dismissed"). For the bearing of this point on the date of the composition of Arist. see H. Willrich, Urkundenfälschung in der hellenistisch-jüdischen Literatur, 1924, p. 88, and Tramontano's note ad loc. (versus Willrich).

And early each day they would go to the court, pay their respects to Ptolemy and then go back to the same place<sup>b</sup> and, after washing their hands in the sea and purifying themselves,<sup>c</sup> would betake themselves in this state to the translation of the laws. Now, when the Law had been transcribed and the work of translation brought to an end in seventy-two days, Demetrius assembled all the Jews at the same place where the laws had been rendered, and in the presence of the translators read them aloud. Thereupon the people expressed their approval of the elders who had interpreted the Law, and also praised Demetrius for conceiving the idea through which he had become the originator of great benefits to them, and they urged him as well

Greeks, 1934, pp. 49 f., writes: "Although official Judaism has preserved no trace of a precept to that effect, there is abundant evidence that Jews in Hellenistic countries built their synagogues by preference in the proximity of water. Josephus, Ant. xiv. 10, 23, para. 258, tells of a decision of the people of Halicarnassus to suffer the Jews to . . . build synagogues, as was their custom, by the sea. At Philippi the apostle Paul and his companions went forth on a Sabbath outside the town gate near the river where they supposed there was a synagogue (Acts xvi. 13).

"As we have seen, the synagogues of Delos, Aegina and Miletus in fact lie close to the edge of the shore." He adds in a note, "It seems plausible to seek the motive for this Jewish custom of the Diaspora in . . . the ritual uncleanness of the land of the Gentiles," and cites an illustrative passage from Mekhilta, the rabbinic commentary on Exodus (xii. 1).

to give their leaders the Law to read <sup>a</sup>; and all of them, including the priest and the eldest of the translators <sup>b</sup> and the chief officers of the community, <sup>c</sup> requested that, since the translation had been so successfully completed, it should remain as it was and not be altered. Accordingly, when all had approved this idea, they ordered that, if anyone saw any further addition made to the text of the Law or anything omitted from it, he should examine it and make it known and correct it <sup>d</sup>; in this they acted wisely, that what had once been judged good might remain for ever.

(14) And so the king rejoiced at this act as well, seeing his design result in a useful accomplishment, but especially did he rejoice when the laws were read to him, and he was amazed at the depth of mind and wisdom of the lawgiver; and he began to discuss with Demetrius how it was that though this legislation was so admirable none of the historians or poets had made mention of it. Thereupon Demetrius explained that no one had ventured to undertake a description of these laws because of their divine and awful nature, <sup>e</sup> and that some who had already attempted this had been afflicted by God; and he

<sup>a</sup> A famous Greek historian from Chios, who flourished in the second half of the 4th century B.C., and came to Egypt in the reign of Ptolemy I. Only fragments of his works, including the Hellenica and Philippica, have survived, some of them among the papyri found by Grenfell and Hunt at Oxyrhynchus. Josephus mentions him again in Ap. i. 221.

<sup>e</sup> Theodectes of Phaselis, who was a rhetorician as well as a tragic poet, lived most of his life at Athens, where he was a pupil of Plato and Isocrates, and a friend of Aristotle (cf. Eth.

told how, when Theopompus <sup>a</sup> wished to relate something about them, he had become disturbed in mind for more than thirty days and during lucid intervals had tried to appease God, suspecting that it was from this source that his madness came; not only that, but he learned from a dream that this misfortune had befallen him because he had been too curious <sup>b</sup> about divine things and wished to disclose them to common <sup>c</sup> men, and so he gave up his plan and recovered his reason. Demetrius also informed him that it was reported <sup>d</sup> of Theodectes, the tragic poet, <sup>e</sup> that, when he wished to mention in one of his dramas the matters written in the sacred book, <sup>f</sup> his eyes were afflicted with cataracts, and, when he recognized the cause, he rid himself of this disease by propitiating God.

(15) The king, then, having received these books from the hands of Demetrius, did obeisance to them <sup>g</sup> and ordered that great care should be taken of the books in order that they might remain intact: he also invited the translators to come to him frequently from Judaea, for this would be profitable for them

Nic. vii. 7. 6, 1150 b). He is said to have been defeated by Theopompus in a rhetorical contest arranged by Artemisia at Halicarnassus. There seems to be no evidence that he visited Egypt.

<sup>f</sup> A fragment of a Hellenistic drama on a biblical theme (the Exodus) survives in the excerpts from the Ecagōgē of the Jewish poet Ezekiel in Eusebius, Præp. Evang. ix. 28 ff., separately edited by J. Wieneke, Ezekielis Iudæi poetæ Alexandrini . . . Ecagōgē, 1931.

Or, less probably, "having received these (explanations) from Demetrius, did obeisance to them (the Jews)"; the corresponding passage in Arist. apparently refers to the books (so Tramontano); moreover it is inherently more likely that the king did obeisance to the sacred books than to the Jews.

both on account of the honour to be received from him and the gifts <sup>a</sup> they would gain. At this time, he said, it was only right to send them home, but, if they came to him of their own will, they would obtain all that their wisdom deserved to obtain and his own generosity was able to provide. For the time being, therefore, he sent them home, giving each of them three very fine garments, two talents of gold, a small wine-cup worth a talent,<sup>b</sup> and the covering for a banquet-table.<sup>c</sup> Now these gifts he gave them to keep for themselves, but to the high priest Eleazar he sent by them ten couches with feet of silver and the furnishings belonging to them and a small wine-cup <sup>d</sup> worth thirty talents and, in addition to these, ten garments, a purple robe, a very handsome crown and a hundred pieces of fine-linen weave, as well as shallow bowls and cups and libation-bowls <sup>e</sup> and two golden mixing-bowls to be dedicated to God. He also requested of him by letter that, if any of these men wished to come to him, he should permit them to do so, for he highly valued the society of those possessed of learning, and took pleasure in using his wealth for the benefit of such persons. These, then, were the things done by Ptolemy Philadelphus in appreciation and honour of the Jews.<sup>f</sup> example, Seleucus Nicator <sup>a</sup> granted them citizenship in the cities which he founded in Asia and Lower Syria and in his capital, Antioch, itself, and declared them to have equal privileges with the Macedonians and Greeks who were settled in these cities, so that this citizenship of theirs remains to this very day; and the proof of this is the fact that he gave orders that those Jews who were unwilling to use foreign oil should receive a fixed sum of money from the gymnasiarchs to pay for their own kind of oil <sup>b</sup>; and, when the people of Antioch proposed to revoke this privilege, Mucianus, who was then governor of Syria, maintained it; and afterwards, when Vespasian and his son Titus became masters of the habitable world, and the Alexandrians and Antiochians asked that the Jews should no longer continue to have the rights of citizenship, they did not obtain their request. From this one may get some notion of the fairness and generosity of the Romans, especially of Vespasian and Titus, for in spite of having suffered great hardships in the war with the Jews and feeling bitter toward them because they had not laid down their arms and persisted in fighting to the very last, they still did not deprive them of their existing rights of citizenship, mentioned above; indeed <sup>c</sup> they overcame their former anger as well as the demands of the Alexandrians and Antiochians, who were powerful

Now concerning the decision of Agrippa there is perhaps no reason to be surprised, for at that time our nation was not at war with the Romans; but one may properly be amazed at the generosity of Vespasian and Titus who acted with moderation after the wars and great struggles which they had with us. (3) When Antiochus the Great reigned over Asia <sup>b</sup> it was the lot of the Jews to undergo great hardships through the devastation of their land, as did also the inhabitants of Coele-Syria. For while he was at war with Ptolemy Philopator and with his son Ptolemy, surnamed Epiphanes, they had to suffer, and whether he was victorious or defeated, to experience the same fate <sup>c</sup>; so that they were in no way different from a storm-tossed ship which is beset on either side by heavy seas, finding themselves crushed between the successes of Antiochus and the adverse turn of his fortunes. When, however, Antiochus had de-

In 217 B.C. Philopator decisively defeated Antiochus at the battle of Raphia near the sea-coast of Palestine, a few miles S.W. of Gaza; as a result of this defeat Antiochus had to "evacuate the whole country up to the Lebanon" (Bevan, Ptol. p. 229). Philopator died in 203 B.C., and two years later his successor Ptolemy Epiphanes had to give up Palestine to Antiochus' victorious forces, cf. note a, p. 66.

<sup>a</sup> From the following sentence it seems that by "Ptolemy" here Josephus means Ptolemy Philopator. After Philopator's death (203 B.C.) and Ptolemy Epiphanes' accession Antiochus defeated the latter's general, the Aetolian Scopas, in two campaigns between 201 and 198 B.C., and finally ended Ptolemaic rule in Palestine. Thus Josephus is inaccurate in saying that Antiochus defeated Ptolemy if, as is generally assumed, he means Ptolemy Philopator, cf. Bevan, II. Sel. ii. 37, note 6, "Coele-Syria had thus to be conquered twice by Antiochus subsequently to Raphia. This is the real fact at the basis of Josephus' statement that Antiochus conquered it before the death of Ptolemy Philopator. Josephus makes a hasty inference from his knowledge that Scopas had found the country in Seleucid occupation." I venture to suggest, however, that Josephus' inaccuracy is more apparent than feated Ptolemy, he annexed Judaea.<sup>a</sup> And on the death of Philopator his son sent out a great force with Scopas as general against the people of Coele-Syria, and he took many of their cities and also our nation, which went over to him after being attacked.<sup>b</sup> But not long afterwards Antiochus defeated Scopas in a battle near the sources of the Jordan,<sup>c</sup> and destroyed a great part of his army. And later, when Antiochus took possession of the cities in Coele-Syria<sup>d</sup> which Scopas had held, and Samaria, the Jews of their own will went over to him and admitted him to their city and made abundant provision for his entire army and his elephants; and they readily joined his forces in besieging the garrison which had been left by Scopas in the citadel of Jerusalem.<sup>e</sup> Accordingly Antiochus, considering it just to requite the zeal and exertions of the Jews on his behalf, wrote to his governors<sup>f</sup> real. Above, in § 130, he speaks of Antiochus' victories and defeats in wars with Philopator and Epiphanes. In the present passage it is quite possible that by "Ptolemy" he means not Philopator but Epiphanes, and that we should render the δὲ in the following sentence by "for" and not by "and" or "but," thus making the sentence explanatory of the preceding one: i.e. the passage would read, "When, however, Antiochus had defeated Ptolemy (Epiphanes), he annexed Judaea. For on the death of Philopator his son (Epiphanes), etc."

<sup>a</sup> “ Friends ” here probably has its technical meaning ; in the Macedonian kingdoms there were two orders of the military aristocracy (as earlier in Persia), that of Kinsmen (of the king) and that of Friends, cf. Bevan, H. Sel. ii. 280 ff.

 Antiochus’ appreciation of the help given him by the Jews, as is pointed out by Reinach, who suspects Josephus of “ throwing dust in his reader’s eyes.” On the other hand Bevan, H. Sel. ii. 297, holds “ that Antiochus should in such

I shall, therefore, cite the letters written to his governors concerning them, first explaining that Polybius of Megalopolis attests these statements of mine<sup>b</sup>; for in the sixteenth book of his History he says the following. "Scopas, the general of Ptolemy, set out for the upper country<sup>c</sup> and during the winter subdued the Jewish nation." And in the same book he says that, after Scopas was defeated by Antiochus, "Antiochus took Batanaia,<sup>d</sup> Samaria, Abila<sup>e</sup> and Gadara,<sup>f</sup> and after a short time there also came over to him those Jews who live near the temple of Jerusalem, as it is called, concerning which we have more to say, especially concerning the renown of<sup>g</sup> the temple, but we shall defer the account to another occasion." Now this is what Polybius relates. But we shall return to the circumstances have shown some favours to the Jews and made presents to the Temple is in itself extremely likely."

of Coele-Syria and Phoenicia under Antiochus the Great, cf. Michel, Recueil d'inscriptions grecques, 1900, No. 1229 (p. 858); Bevan, H. Sel. ii. 297, writes, "In objecting that Ptolemy was made governor in 218, Juden u. Griechen, p. 40, Willrich is thinking of the date in which he was in the Egyptian service, Polyb. v. 65. 3. That he deserted to the Seleucid in 218 with Ceraeas and Hippolochus, Polyb. v. 70. 10, is conjecture only. When he was made governor of Coele-Syria there is absolutely nothing to show." (Of this reply to his objection Willrich takes no notice in his later work, Urkundenfälschung in der hellenistisch-jüdischen Literatur, 1924.)

<sup>b</sup> Text uncertain; among other things we expect the number of artabae to be given. The artaba was an Egyptian (originally Persian) measure of varying capacity, normally about 40 litres, according to A. S. Hunt and C. C. Edgar, Select Papyri (Loeb Classical Library), i. 447. According to F. Heichelheim, Wirtschaftliche Schwankungen der Zeit von Alexander bis Augustus, 1930, pp. 118 ff., the cost of an artaba of wheat in Egypt during the 3rd century varied from 2 to 5 drachmas (in exceptional years less than 2 or more than 5).

value of twenty thousand pieces of silver,<sup>a</sup> and sacred artabae of fine flour<sup>b</sup> in accordance with their native law,<sup>c</sup> and one thousand four hundred and sixty medimni<sup>d</sup> of wheat and three hundred and seventy-five medimni of salt.<sup>e</sup> And it is my will that these things be made over to them as I have ordered, and that the work on the temple be completed, including the porticoes and any other part that it may be necessary to build. The timber, moreover, shall be brought from Judaea itself and from other nations<sup>f</sup> and Lebanon without the imposition of a toll-charge. The like shall be done with the other materials needed for making the restoration of the temple more splendid. And all the members of the nation shall have a form of government in accordance with the laws of their country, and the senate, the priests, the scribes of the temple<sup>g</sup> and the temple-singers

<sup>a</sup> Probably the temple measure is meant. We need not suppose that the mention of artabae indicates "an Egyptian redactor" of the letter, as Büchler and Reinach suppose. Ptolemaic measures continued to be used in Palestine even after the Seleucid conquest; moreover ἀρτάβη was a "Hebrew measure" (cf. Heb. 'ardāb) according to Epiphanius (cited by S. Krauss, Talmudische Archäologie ii. 395). Krauss equates the Ptolemaic artaba with the Heb. hōmer.

<sup>d</sup> The (Attic and Sicilian) medimnus = c. 50 litres. Whether the number 1460 has any significance ( $= 365 \times 4$ ) and pre-supposes an Egyptian "solar year," as Büchler suggests, seems to me very doubtful.

<sup>e</sup> This royal grant of provisions for the temple reminds us of those said to have been made by Cyrus, Ant. xi. 16 ff. (1 Esd. vi. 29; Ezra vi. 9 ff.), who gave 20,500 artabae of wheat (!); by Darius, Ant. xi. 62, 102 (1 Esd. iv. 52 ff.); and by Xerxes (bibl. Artaxerxes), Ant. xi. 127 (1 Esd. viii. 19 ff.).

<sup>a</sup> H. Willrich, Urkundenfälschung, p. 73, objects that the Jews did not pay a poll-tax, or other taxes, directly to the Seleucid king, but we know too little of the Seleucid system of taxation to judge. It may be, moreover, that in Seleucid times the poll-tax, like the later Roman tributum capitis in the provinces, included a variety of personal and business taxes, cf. Arnold and Bouchier, The Roman System of Provincial Administration, 1914, pp. 199 ff. On the poll-tax in the Seleucid kingdom see Schürer i. 229 note 14, Bickerman, *Inst. And as for those who were carried off from the city and are slaves, we herewith set them free, both them and the children born to them, and order their property to be restored to them."

(4) Now these were the contents of the letter. And out of reverence for the temple he also published a proclamation throughout the entire kingdom, <sup>e</sup> of which the contents were as follows. "It is unlawful for any foreigner to enter the enclosure of the temple which is forbidden to the Jews, except to those of them who are accustomed to enter after purifying themselves in accordance with the law of the country. <sup>f</sup> Nor shall anyone bring into the city the flesh of horses or of mules or of wild or tame asses, or of leopards, first month of the year, according to the older Hebrew calendar.

Decree of Antiochus III concerning the temple and Jerusalem.

<sup>a</sup> For other instances of tax-exemptions allegedly granted the Jews by foreign rulers, cf. Ant. xi. 61 (1 Esd. iv. 49—Darius), xii. 151 (Antiochus III), xiii. 52 (1 Macc. x. 29—Demetrius); Herod the Great also did so on at least two occasions, cf. Ant. xv. 303, xvii. 25. For an actual instance of such an exemption by Antiochus III to a Hellenistic city cf. Rostovtzeff, CAH vii. 179.

<sup>e</sup> Even those scholars who consider this decree genuine admit that this phrase, "throughout the entire kingdom," is a later addition, or at least an exaggeration on Josephus' part.

<sup>a</sup> Jews were forbidden to eat the flesh of the animals here mentioned, but there is no evidence that they were forbidden to use them (at least the tame ones) for any purpose, or bring their skins into Jerusalem. In this curious prohibition Büchler sees another indication that Antiochus' decree originally applied to the Samaritan temple on Mount Gerizim; cf. Appendix D.

<sup>b</sup> There are extant a number of ancient Jewish Greek inscriptions which mention fines to be paid the Jewish community or synagogue treasury for violation of Jewish re-foxes or hares or, in general, of any animals forbidden to the Jews. Nor is it lawful to bring in their skins or even to breed any of these animals in the city.<sup>a</sup> But only the sacrificial animals known to their ancestors and necessary for the propitiation of God shall they be permitted to use. And the person who violates any of these statutes shall pay to the priests a fine of three thousand drachmas of silver.<sup>b</sup>”

He also testified in writing to our piety and loyalty when, on the occasion of his being in the upper satrapies, he learned of revolts in Phrygia and Lydia, and ordered Zeuxis, his governor,<sup>c</sup> and one of his close friends, to send some of our people from Babylonia to Phrygia. He then wrote as follows. “King Antiochus to Zeuxis, his father,<sup>d</sup> greeting. If you are in good health, it is well. I also am in sound health. Learning that the people in Lydia and Phrygia are revolting, I have come to consider this as requiring very serious attention on my part, and, on taking counsel with my friends as to what should be done, I determined to transport two thousand Jewish families with their effects from Mesopotamia and Babylonia to the fortresses and most important ligious statutes, e.g. from Smyrna, Tlos, Hierapolis in Phrygia (1000 denarii), and Stobi in Macedonia (250,000 denarii !!).

<sup>c</sup> It is generally assumed that this was the Zeuxis who was satrap (or governor, στρατηγός) of Babylonia c. 220 B.C. (Polyb. v. 45 ff.) and that he, in turn, was the Zeuxis who was satrap of Lydia c. 201 B.C. (Polyb. xvi. 1. 8). Assuming the identity of these three, we must further suppose that Zeuxis was transferred from Babylonia to Lydia sometime after 213 B.C. when Antiochus III conquered the provinces in Asia Minor held by Achæus.

<sup>d</sup> Another instance of the title “father” given by a Seleucid king to his officer occurs in Ant. xiii. 127 (1 Macc. xi. 32 Demetrius to Lathenes); cf. also Ant. xi. 218 (Apocr. Esther xiii. 6—Artaxerxes to Haman).

It is my will, therefore—though it may be a troublesome matter—that they should be transported and, since I have promised it,<sup>b</sup> use their own laws. And when you have brought them to the places mentioned, you shall give each of them a place to build a house and land to cultivate and plant with vines, and shall exempt them from payment of taxes on the produce of the soil for ten years.<sup>c</sup> And also, until they get produce from the soil, let them have grain measured out to them for feeding their servants, and let there be given also to those engaged in public service<sup>d</sup> sufficient for their needs in order that through receiving kind treatment from us they may show themselves the more eager in our cause. ruler. If we accept the variant, there is, of course, no need to emend.

<sup>f</sup> This gift is mentioned in several ancient sources: Polyb. xxviii. 20. 9, "... the agreement which those in Alexandria asserted had recently been made between Ptolemy and his (Antiochus Epiphanes') father, to the effect that Ptolemy should receive Coele-Syria as a dowry when he married Cleopatra, the mother of the present (Egyptian) ruler"; Appian, Syr. 5, "Being about to make war on the Romans, he (Antiochus III) attempted to win over the neighbouring kings by alliances of marriage, and sent his daughter

Cleopatra, surnamed the Syrian, to Egypt to Ptolemy, giving him as a marriage-present Coele-Syria, which he had himself taken from Ptolemy"; so also Porphyry, ap. Eusebius, Chronicon, mentioning Syria, Samaria and Judaea, and Jerome on Daniel xi. 17, who specifies "all of Coele-Syria." In view of the fact that the Seleucids ruled all of Palestine and Syria after the victories of Antiochus the Great over the army of Ptolemy Epiphanes, 200-198 B.C. (cf. § 131 notes), many scholars believe that the assignment of the revenues of Coele-Syria to Ptolemy Epiphanes was never carried out, but if by "Ptolemy" in § 158 (cf. note ad loc.) Epiphanes is meant, it follows that Josephus (or his source), at any rate, believed that Ptolemy actually had complete or partial control of Palestine and Transjordan, in spite of the earlier Seleucid conquest of the country; see the article of Cuq, cited in Appendix E.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. Ptolemy Epiphanes; after "Ptolemy" the variant adds, "Euergetes, who was the father of Philopator." This point is discussed in Appendix E; here it may suffice to remark that while the variant is not necessarily an "absurd gloss," as Reinach too decidedly calls it, it is probably an addition to Josephus' text made to remove the difficulty caused by representing Coele-Syria as subject to Ptolemy Epiphanes after the definitive conquest of the country by the Seleucids in 198 B.C. Since Josephus has already got beyond the reign of Euergetes (246-221 B.C.) and has already mentioned Epiphanes and his contemporary Antiochus III the high-priesthood of Onias. For, when Eleazar died, his uncle Manasses took over the high priesthood, and, after he departed this life, the office came to Onias, who was a son of Simon, called the Just.<sup>a</sup> And Simon was a brother of Eleazar, as I have said before.<sup>b</sup> This Onias was small-minded and passionately fond of money and since for this reason he did not render on behalf of the people the tribute of twenty talents of silver which his fathers had paid to the kings out of their own revenues, he roused the anger of King Ptolemy.<sup>c</sup> And the king sent an envoy to Jerusalem to denounce Onias for not rendering the tribute, and threatened that, if he did not receive it, he would parcel out their land and send his soldiers to settle on it. Accordingly, when the Jews heard the king's message, they were dismayed, but Onias was not put out of countenance by any of these threats, so great was his avarice.

(2) Now there was a certain Joseph, who was still a young man but because of his dignity and foresight

Joseph, the Tobiad, and his uncle, Onias II.

(§ 131 ff.), and since Joseph the Tobiad is obviously dealing with Epiphanes (cf. above, note f, p. 80) and not Euergetes, it is reasonable to suppose that the mention of Euergetes in the variant is an interpolation. On the other hand, in § 223 Josephus (or at least one of his sources) states that Joseph died about the time of Seleucus IV's accession, which was in 187 B.C., after being tax-collector for 22 years, so that he must have begun his work in 209 B.C. at the latest, that is, several years before the accession of Ptolemy Epiphanes, which was in 204/3 B.C. Moreover, it is probable that he retired from office some years before his death in 187 B.C., probably at the time of the Seleucid conquest of Coele-Syria in 198 B.C., which would move back the beginning of his term of office to 221 B.C. at the end of the reign of Euergetes: so that the interpolation here appears to have been the work of someone who was aware of the inconsistency of the sources used by Josephus in his narrative of the Tobiards.

<sup>c</sup> Variant Phicola (Gr. Phikola): the site has not been identified, but presumably was in Transjordan, since the Tobiards were originally Ammonites; cf. § 230 note c.

had a reputation for uprightness<sup>a</sup> among the inhabitants of Jerusalem, his father being Tobias,<sup>b</sup> and his mother a sister of the high priest Onias : and, when his mother informed him of the envoy's arrival—for he himself happened to be away in the village of Phichola,<sup>c</sup> from which he had originally come—he went to the city (of Jerusalem) and upbraided Onias for not regarding the safety of his fellow-citizens and for being willing, instead, to place the nation in danger by withholding the money on account of which, Joseph said, he had received the chief magistracy<sup>d</sup> and had obtained the high-priestly office.<sup>e</sup> But, if he was so passionately fond of money that for its sake he could endure to see his country endangered and his fellow-citizens suffer all sorts of things, he advised him to go to the king and request him to remit to him either the whole of the money or a part of it. As Onias, however, answered that he did not desire to hold office and said that he was ready to Below, in § 285, Josephus says that after Mattathias' death, his son Judas succeeded to the προστασίαν τῶν πραγμάτων, which clearly means the assumption of chief authority or leadership of the rebels, and is therefore not a technical term of civil office (under the Seleucids). Nor does there appear to be sufficient ground for believing that Joseph later (cf. § 167) assumed the προστασίαν and thus deprived Onias of part of his official rank, as maintained by Büchler and, more recently, by Momigliano and Fruin. The same problem arises in connexion with the quarrel about the agoranomia between the prostatēs Simon and the high priest Onias, 2 Mace. iii. 4, on which see the works cited in Appendix G.

And, when Onias gave his permission, Joseph went up to the temple and, calling the people together in assembly, exhorted them not to be disturbed or frightened because of his uncle Onias' neglect of them, and begged them rather to keep their minds free of fear and dark forebodings; for he promised that he himself would go as an envoy to the king and persuade him that they were not doing any wrong. And so, when the people heard this, they thanked Joseph, while he himself went down from the temple and hospitably received the envoy sent by Ptolemy; and after presenting him with valuable gifts and entertaining him lavishly for many days, he sent him on ahead to the king, telling him that he himself would follow. For he had, indeed, become even more eager to meet the king, when the envoy encouraged him and urged that he go to Egypt, and promised to see that he should obtain from Ptolemy whatever he desired; for the envoy greatly admired his liberality <sup>e</sup> and the dignity of his character.

(3) And so the envoy went to Egypt and reported to the king the arrogant behaviour of Onias, and informed him of the excellence of Joseph and that

<sup>a</sup> That is, merely their spokesman or envoy (cf. § 161 note d), as the context indicates. If he had been formally elected by the people to the highest civil office, Josephus' source would have said so; at any rate the king himself would have had to recognize him as such.

<sup>b</sup> Those scholars who believe (not without reason) that these events should be placed in the reign of Ptolemy Philopator, whose queen's name was Arsinoe, may assume that Josephus' authority, living in the 2nd or 1st century B.C., was more familiar with the name Cleopatra, borne by several Ptolemaic queens after Epiphanes' wife, and thus made a natural slip in calling Arsinoe Cleopatra (unless, of course, he intended to come to him to ask that the sins of his people be excused, for he was their protector.<sup>a</sup> Indeed, he continued to use such extravagance of speech in praising the young man that he disposed both the king and his wife Cleopatra<sup>b</sup> to feel friendly toward Joseph even before his arrival. Now Joseph, after sending to his various friends in Samaria<sup>c</sup> and borrowing money, made ready the things needed for his journey, such as clothes, drinking-vessels, and pack-animals, which equipment he procured for about twenty thousand<sup>d</sup> drachmas, and came to Alexandria. But it so happened that at that time all the chief men and magistrates of the cities of Syria and Phoenicia were coming there to bid for the tax-farming rights which the king used to sell every year to the wealthy men in each city.<sup>e</sup> When these men, therefore, saw Joseph on the road, they made fun of his poverty and bareness. But when he arrived at Alexandria, he heard that Ptolemy was in Memphis, and so he Cleopatra is substituted for Arsinoë by Josephus himself, cf. Appendix E). Livy makes a similar slip, xxvii. 4. 10.

met him there and presented himself to him.<sup>a</sup> Now the king was sitting in a chariot with his wife and with his friend Athenion—this was the man who had been an envoy to Jerusalem and had been entertained by Joseph—, and as soon as Athenion caught sight of him, he introduced him to the king, saying that this was the person whom he had described to him, when he returned from Jerusalem, as an excellent and liberal<sup>b</sup> young man. Ptolemy, therefore, first greeted him<sup>c</sup> and even invited him to come up into his chariot, and when he was seated, began to complain about the actions of Onias. Then Joseph said, “Pardon him because of his age<sup>d</sup>; for surely you are not unaware that old people and infants are likely to have the same level of intelligence. But from us who are young you will obtain everything so as to find no fault.” Thereupon Ptolemy, being pleased with the charm and ready wit of the young man, began to be still fonder of him as though he were an old and tried friend, so much so that he told him to take up his residence in the palace and had him as a guest at his own table every day. Accordingly, when the king came to Alexandria, and the chief men of Syria saw Joseph seated at his side, they were disagreeably affected.

<sup>a</sup> According to §§ 44, 157, Onias was a son of Simon the Just whom Josephus makes a contemporary of Ptolemy Philadelphus, and was a child when his uncle Eleazar succeeded Simon, some time in Philadelphus’ reign. Thus Onias must have been at least 70 years old at this time, which is supposedly after 193 B.C., the date of Ptolemy Epiphanes’ marriage to Cleopatra (cf. § 154). Although Josephus is mistaken in placing Simon the Just so early in the 3rd century B.C. (cf. Appendix B), he is at least consistent in making Onias an old man at this time.

(4) Now when the day came round on which the rights to farm taxes in the cities were to be sold, bids were made by those eminent in rank in the various provinces.<sup>a</sup> When the sum of taxes from Coele-Syria<sup>b</sup> and from Phoenicia and Judaea with Samaria added up to eight thousand talents,<sup>c</sup> Joseph came forward and accused the bidders of having made an agreement to offer the king a low price for the taxes, whereas he for his part promised to give double that amount and send over to the king the property of those who had been remiss toward his house; for this right was sold<sup>d</sup> along with that of farming the taxes. Thereupon the king, who heard him gladly, said that he would confirm the sale of the tax-farming rights to him, as he was likely to increase his revenue, but asked whether he also had some persons to give surety for him; he then answered very cleverly, "Yes, I will offer persons of the very best character, whom you will not distrust." And when the king asked him to tell who they were, he replied, "I offer you, O King, you yourself and your wife as the persons who will give surety for me, each to guarantee the other's share."<sup>e</sup> At this Ptolemy laughed and granted him the tax-farming rights without guarantors. This act gave great pain to those who had come to Egypt from the cities, for they considered them-

Egypt itself (de Aegypto) in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus as 14,800 talents; Herodotus, iii. 91, gives 350 talents as the tribute taken by Darius from Phoenicia, Palestine and Cyprus: Cicero estimates the total revenue of Ptolemy Auletes as 12,500 talents. Cf. also 2 Macc. iv. 8 ff.

Thereupon Ptolemy, who admired his spirit and commended his actions, "permitted him to do whatever he wished. When the "Syrians heard of this, they were struck with consternation and, having a terrible example of the consequences of disobedience in the execution of the men of Ascalon, they opened their gates and readily admitted Joseph and paid the tribute. And when the inhabitants of Scythopolis <sup>d</sup> also attempted to "insult him and would not render him the tribute which they formerly paid without any dispute, he put to death their chief men as well and sent their property to the king. from farming the taxes, he used his wealth to make permanent the power which he now had, thinking it prudent to preserve the source and foundation of his present good fortune by means of the wealth which he had himself acquired; and so he surreptitiously sent many gifts to the king and to Cleopatra and to their friends and to all those who were powerful at court, purchasing their goodwill through these gifts.

(6) This good fortune he enjoyed for twenty-two years,<sup>a</sup> becoming the father of seven sons by one wife, and also begetting a son, named Hyrcanus, by the daughter of his brother Solymius, whom he married under the following circumstances. He once came to Alexandria with his brother as he was taking there his daughter, who was of marriageable age, in order that he might marry her to one of the Jews of high rank: and when Joseph was dining with the king, a beautiful dancing-girl came into the banquet-room, and Joseph, having fallen in love with her, told his brother of this and begged him, since the Jews were prevented by law from having intercourse with a foreign woman, to aid in concealing his sin and do him a good service by making it possible for him to satisfy his desire. Thereupon his brother gladly undertaking to be of service, beautified his own daughter and brought her to him by night to sleep with him. But Joseph in his drunken state did not know how matters really were, and so he had intercourse with his brother's daughter, and when this had happened several times, he fell still more violently in love with her. He then told his brother that he

But his brother urged him not to be anxious, telling him to enjoy without fear the woman whom he loved, and to make her his wife; and he revealed the truth to him, how he had chosen to dishonour his own daughter rather than see him fall into disgrace, and so Joseph, commending him for his brotherly love, married his daughter and by her begot a son named Hyrcanus, as we said before.<sup>a</sup> Now this child while still a young lad of thirteen years showed such natural courage and intelligence<sup>c</sup> that he became an object of violent jealousy to his brothers because of his great superiority and enviable qualities.<sup>b</sup> But when Joseph, wishing to learn which of his sons was naturally well disposed to virtue, sent them one after another to those who were then famed as teachers, the other sons because of their laziness and disinclination for work returned to him foolish and ignorant; and after that he sent out his youngest son Hyrcanus a two days' journey into the wilderness to sow the ground, giving him three hundred yoke of oxen, but hiding the yoke-straps. historian Josephus himself (cf. Vita 7 ff.); in the further details of the narrative he detects traces of older biblical motifs, such as the deception practised by Laban on Jacob, the envy of Joseph's brothers, the favour shown to Joseph by Pharaoh. At the same time he traces a parallelism between the Tobiad story and the narrative concerning the high priests Jason and Menelaus in 2 Macc., concluding (p. 102) that "Joseph of the Tobiad story is really the Menelaus of 2 Macc., while Hyrcanus is a free remodelling (Umgestaltung) of Jason." There is, of course, no doubt that a large part of the Tobiad story is fiction, but historical elements also are to be found.

<sup>a</sup> Ptolemy Epiphanes' elder son, Ptolemy Philometor, was born in 187 or 186 B.C.; his younger son, Ptolemy Euergetes II (Physeon) was born sometime after 185 B.C., cf. Bevan, Ptol. pp. 282-285.

<sup>b</sup> Above, in § 160, Josephus has described Joseph as "still a young man" when he became tax-collector of Coele-Syria after Ptolemy's marriage with Cleopatra, which was drivers, who advised him to send some men to his father to bring back the straps, for he thought that he ought not to lose time in waiting for those who might be sent, and instead conceived an ingenious plan worthy of an older man. Accordingly, he slaughtered ten yoke of oxen and after distributing their meat among the workmen, he cut up their hides and made straps with which he fastened the yokes; and when he had in this way sown the ground which his father had ordered him to sow, he returned to him. And when he came, his father was more than delighted with his good sense, and commending the quickness of his intelligence and the boldness combined with this, he loved him still more as if he were his only genuine son, and this vexed his brothers.

(7) About this time he was told by someone that a son had been born to King Ptolemy,<sup>a</sup> and all the leading men of Syria and the territory subject to him were setting out with a great array for Alexandria to celebrate the birthday of the child; he himself was kept from going by his age, but he tried his sons to see whether any of them was willing to go abroad to the king.<sup>b</sup> The elder sons, however, begged to be excused, saying they were too rough<sup>c</sup> for such company, but they advised him to send their brother

c. 193 B.C. It is therefore unlikely that at the birth of Ptolemy's son (whether elder or younger), he "was kept from going by his age" or had sons old enough to go abroad. This is one of several difficulties caused by Josephus' statements that Joseph's activity began in the reign of Ptolemy Epiphanes.

<sup>c</sup> In this connexion we may mention the correspondence of an earlier Tobiad with Ptolemy Philadelphus preserved in the papyri (cf. works cited in Appendix E), which shows how "rough" an Ammonite chief could be, even when addressing a king.

Hyrcanus; gladly listening to them, therefore, he called Hyrcanus and asked him whether he was able and willing to travel to the king. And when he undertook to go, saying he would not need much money for the journey—for, he added, he would live reasonably, so that ten thousand drachmas would suffice him—Joseph was pleased with his son's moderation. But a little while afterward the son advised his father not to send the king gifts from where he was,<sup>a</sup> but to give him a letter to his steward in Alexandria in order that he might provide him with money to buy the most beautiful and precious things which he could find. Joseph, therefore, thinking that the cost of the presents for the king would be ten talents, commended his son for his excellent suggestion, and wrote to his steward Arion, who managed all the wealth which he had in Alexandria, amounting to not less than three thousand talents.<sup>b</sup> For Joseph used to send to Alexandria the money collected from Syria, and when the appointed day came on which he was required to pay over the tribute to the king, he would write to Arion to do this. And so, having asked his father for a letter to this man, and having received it, Hyrcanus set out for Alexandria. But when he had gone, his brothers wrote to all the

(8) When he came to Alexandria, he delivered the letter to Arion, who asked him how many talents he wished to have—he hoped that he would ask for ten or a little more—, but when he said he needed a thousand, Arion became angry and rebuked him for having chosen a dissolute way of life, and explained to him how his father had amassed his wealth by working hard and restraining his desires, and he advised him to imitate the example of his sire. He added that he would give him no more than ten talents, and these for presents to the king. At this the youth was provoked and threw Arion into chains. But Arion's wife informed Cleopatra of this and begged her to rebuke the youth—for Arion was held by her in great esteem—, whereupon Cleopatra made the matter known to the king. So Ptolemy sent to Hyrcanus, saying he was surprised that having been sent to him by his father, he had not appeared before him and had, moreover, imprisoned the steward. He ordered him, therefore, to come and explain to him the reason for his conduct. <sup>a</sup> It seems necessary to adopt Herwerden's emendation γενεθλιάζοντα, "celebrant of a birthday," for γεννηθέντα, "one begotten" or "male child"; but we can hardly accept his second suggestion, which is to read "before his (the child's) father had gone into the temple," since Hyrcanus could hardly expect Ptolemy to believe that a Jewish law obliged a Jew to wait for a pagan father to sacrifice in a pagan temple. On the other hand, if we assume that Hyrcanus' excuse was that he had gone to a temple to sacrifice, the question remains what Jewish temple in Egypt he could have gone to (there is temple and sacrificed to God<sup>a</sup>; it was in accordance with this same principle that he himself had not come to the king, but was waiting to bring the gifts to him who had been his father's benefactor. As for the slave, he had punished him for disobeying the orders which he had been given; for it made no difference, he added, whether one were a small master or a great one. "For if we do not punish such fellows, even you may expect to be held in contempt by your subjects." When Ptolemy heard this, he fell to laughing, and admired the high spirit of the youth.

(9) But Arion, on learning that this was the way the king felt and that there was no help for him, gave the thousand talents to the youth, and was released from chains. And after letting<sup>a</sup> three days go by, Hyrcanus paid his respects to the royal pair, who were glad to see him and entertained him in friendly fashion in honour of his father. Then he secretly went to the slave-dealers and bought from them a hundred boys who were well educated and in the prime of youth, at a talent apiece, and a hundred virgins at the same price. no indication in this story that Hyrcanus had renounced Judaism); the temple of Onias was founded considerably later, cf. §§ 387 ff. Furthermore, according to Josephus himself, Ap. ii. 205, Jewish law "does not allow the birth of our children to be made an occasion for festivity"—how much less the birth of pagan children; so also in the Talmud birthday anniversaries are mentioned as a pagan custom, cf. S. Krauss, Talmudische Archäologie ii. 8. Thus there could hardly be a law "in his (Hyrcanus') country" applying to this celebration (if by θυσία such a celebration is meant—the use of this word here is a further difficulty). Perhaps, the whole problem hardly merits serious consideration in view of Hyrcanus' obvious invention of a custom, and the fictitious nature of the narrative.

invited together with the leading men of the country to feast with the king, he was placed at the foot of the table, being slighted as still a youth by those who assigned the places according to rank. And all those who reclined at table with Hyrcanus piled up before him the bones of their portions—from which they themselves had removed the meat—, so as to cover the part of the table where he reclined, whereupon Tryphon, who was the king's jester and was appointed to make jokes and raise laughter when there was drinking, with the encouragement of those who reclined at the table, stood up before the king and said, " My lord, do you see the bones lying before Hyrcanus ? From this you may guess that his father has stripped all Syria in the same way as Hyrcanus has left these bones bare of meat." The king then laughed at Tryphon's words, and asked Hyrcanus why there were so many bones lying before him, and he replied, " It is natural, my lord ; for dogs eat the bones together with the meat, as these men do "—and he looked toward those who reclined there, indicating that there was nothing lying before them—, " but men eat the meat and throw the bones away, which is just what I, being a man, have now done." Thereupon the king, who admired his reply for being so clever, and to show approval of his wit, ordered all to applaud.<sup>a</sup> But the next day Hyrcanus, going to each of the king's friends and the men powerful at court, and paying his respects to them, inquired of their servants what gift their masters were going to give the king for the child's birthday. And when they said that some were going to give gifts worth ten talents, while of the others, who were of high rank, each would give in accordance with the amount of his wealth, he pretended to be grieved at not being able to bring so large a present, saying he had no more than five talents. Accordingly, when the servants heard this, they reported it to their masters. And they rejoiced at the thought that Joseph would be judged unfavourably and offend the king by the smallness of his present; and when the day came, the others brought their offerings to the king, which in the case of those who believed themselves to be unusually munificent were not worth more than twenty talents, but Hyrcanus brought the hundred boys and hundred virgins whom he had purchased, and giving each of them a talent to carry, presented them, the boys to the king, and the girls to Cleopatra. And while all were astonished at the unexpected lavishness of his gifts, including the royal pair themselves, he also gave to the king's friends and to those who were in attendance on him gifts worth many talents so as to escape any danger from them; for Hyrcanus' brother had written to them to make an end of him. Then Ptolemy in admiration of <sup>a</sup> the young man's magnanimity directed him to take whatever present he wished. But he asked that the king do no more for him than to write to his father and brothers about him. <sup>a</sup> A. Tscherikower, Jews and Greeks (in Hebrew), 1930, pp. 175 f., plausibly suggests that the real reason for Joseph's later hostility toward Hyrcanus and for the envy of Hyrcanus' brothers was the young man's success in taking from his father the position and perquisites he had obtained from Ptolemy.

brothers heard that he had obtained these favours from the king and was returning with great honour, they went out to meet him and do away with him, even though their father knew of it; for being angry with him because of the money which had been spent for the presents, he felt no concern for his safety; his anger at his son had, however, been concealed by Joseph, who feared the king.<sup>a</sup> And when Hyrcanus' brothers encountered him in battle, he killed many of the men with them and also two of the brothers themselves, while the rest escaped to their father in Jerusalem. Hyrcanus therefore went to that city, but as no one admitted him, he withdrew in fear to the country across the river Jordan, and there made his home, levying tribute on the barbarians.<sup>b</sup>

(10)<sup>c</sup> At that time there had begun to reign<sup>d</sup> over Asia Seleucus, surnamed Soter,<sup>e</sup> who was the son of Antiochus the Great. And then also died Hyrcanus' father Joseph, who had been an excellent and high-minded man and had brought the Jewish people from poverty and a state of weakness to more splendid opportunities of life during the twenty-two years when he controlled the taxes of Syria, Phoenicia

<sup>e</sup> The surname of Seleucus IV (187-175 B.C.) was Philopator; Soter was the surname of his uncle Seleucus III (226-223 B.C.).

<sup>e</sup> More correctly Areus (as in some mss., Ant. xiii. 167). There were only two Spartan kings of this name, Areus I, 309–265 B.C., and Areus II, who died as a child in 255 B.C. Josephus is therefore mistaken in placing it in the time of and Samaria.<sup>a</sup> And death also came to his uncle Onias, who left the high priesthood to his son Simon.<sup>b</sup> When he too died, his son Onias<sup>c</sup> became his successor in office, and it was to him that the Lacedaemonian king Areios sent an embassy with a letter, of which the following is a copy.<sup>d</sup> "Areios,<sup>e</sup> king of the Lacedaemonians,<sup>f</sup> to Onias, greeting. <sup>a</sup> On the factional strife arising in Jerusalem from division of sympathies between the pro-Ptolemaic and pro-Seleucid parties see the works cited in Appendices E and G.

<sup>b</sup> At least two problems are here involved, (1) the identity of the "high priest Simon," whether Simon II whose death has been mentioned above, § 225, or Simon the προστάτης τοῦ ἱεροῦ, whose quarrel with the high priest Onias is described in 2 Macc. iii. 4 ff.; (2) if, as is probable, the Simon here meant is Simon II, of the Oniad family, why does Josephus say that he favoured Hyrcanus' brothers "because of kinship with them"? All the sons of Joseph were related to the high priest Onias II through their father, cf. § 160; the statement of the "Tobiad romance," §§ 187 ff., that Hyrcanus was the son of Joseph by a different mother would only make his relation to the high priestly family closer, since his mother was also related to the high priest. It is just possible, how-of Joseph there arose factional strife among the people on account of his sons.<sup>a</sup> For the elder brothers made war on Hyrcanus, who was the youngest of Joseph's children, and the population was divided into two camps. And the majority fought on the side of the elder brothers, as did the high priest Simon because of kinship with them.<sup>b</sup> Hyrcanus, therefore, gave up his intention of returning to Jerusalem, and settled in the country across the Jordan, where he continually warred on the Arabs until he killed many of them and took many captive. And he built a strong fortress,<sup>c</sup> which was constructed entirely of white marble up to the very roof,<sup>d</sup> and had beasts of gigantic size carved on it,<sup>e</sup> and he enclosed it with a wide and deep moat. He also cut through the projecting rock opposite the mountain, and made caves many stades in length; then he made chambers in it, some for banqueting and others for sleeping and living, and ever, that by συγγέμεται Josephus means something like "common interests."

<sup>c</sup> The ruins of what was probably Hyrcanus' fortress have been discovered at 'Arāk el-'Emīr in Transjordan, c. 10 miles N.W. of Heshbon and c. 12 miles E. of the Jordan; they are fully described in Publications of the Princeton Archaeological Expedition to Syria in 1904-5. Momigliano points out, I Tobiadi, pp. 170 ff., that Josephus is mistaken in saying that Hyrcanus built the fortress, since, as the Zenon papyri show, there was a fortress (Gr. βῆσις, Aram. birtā) there as early as the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus. The name Tōbiyāh (Tobiah) inscribed on the rock in one of the caves nearby probably refers to an early Tobiad, perhaps to the Tobiah who was a contemporary of Nehemiah.

he let into it an abundance of running water, which was both a delight and an ornament to his country-estate.<sup>a</sup> The entrances of the caves, however, he made narrower, so that only one person and no more could enter at one time; and this arrangement he made deliberately for the sake of safety, in order to avoid the danger of being besieged and taken by his brothers. In addition he also built enclosures remarkable for their size, and adorned them with vast parks. And when he had completed the place in this manner, he named it Tyre.<sup>b</sup> This place is between Arabia and Judaea, across the Jordan, not far from Essebonitis.<sup>c</sup> And he ruled over those parts for seven years, during all the time that Seleucus reigned over Asia.<sup>d</sup> Now when this king died, his brother Antiochus, surnamed Epiphanes, occupied the throne after him. And Ptolemy, the king of Egypt, who was also surnamed Epiphanes, died, leaving two sons who were still quite young, the elder being called Philometor,<sup>e</sup> and the younger Physcon.<sup>f</sup> As for Hyrcanus, seeing how great was the power which Antiochus had, and fearing that he might be captured by him and punished for what he had done to the

<sup>d</sup> Josephus' language is careless here; Seleucus IV ruled from 187 to 175 B.C. = 13 years. Possibly, as Otto suggests, PW ix. 530, he means that the 7 years of Hyrcanus' rule over Transjordan all came within the limits of Seleucus' reign.

<sup>g</sup> According to 2 Macc. iv. 23 Menelaus was a brother, not of Onias III, but of Simon, the προστάτης τοῦ ἱεροῦ; Simon, in turn, was, according to 2 Macc. iii. 4, ἐκ τῆς Βενιαμὴν φυλῆς—either of the tribe of Benjamin or of the priestly family

Arabs, he ended his life by his own hand. And all his property was seized by Antiochus.<sup>a</sup>

(v. 1) About this same time the high priest Onias<sup>b</sup> also died, and Antiochus gave the high priesthood to his brother<sup>c</sup>; for the son whom Onias had left was still an infant. But we shall relate all the facts concerning this son<sup>d</sup> in the proper place.<sup>e</sup> Jesus, however,—this was the brother of Onias—was deprived of the high-priesthood when the king became angry with him and gave it to his youngest brother, named Onias; for Simon had three sons, and the high-priesthood came to all three of them, as we have shown.<sup>f</sup> Now Jesus changed his name to Jason, while Onias was called Menelaus.<sup>g</sup> And when the former high priest Jesus rose against Menelaus, who was appointed after him, the populace was divided between the two, the Tobiads being on the side of Menelaus, while the majority of the people supported Jason<sup>h</sup>; and being of Benjamin (= Miniamin? cf. 2 Chron. xxxi. 15). Moreover, in contrast to what Josephus writes below about Jason expelling the Tobiads from Jerusalem, he says in B.J. i. 31 that it was Onias "one of the chief priests" who did so. Another difficulty is that Josephus's language in the following sentence, "and when the former high priest Jesus rose against Menelaus, who was appointed after him," seems to indicate that Menelaus was not a brother of Jason. On the relation of this confused passage (which several scholars, including E. Meyer, think worthless) to other passages in Josephus and 2 Macc. see the works cited in Appendix G.

<sup>a</sup> At this point begins Josephus's paraphrase of 1 Maccabees (i. 14-xiii. 42), which continues to Ant. xiii. 214 (cf. note ad loc. on his omission of the last three chapters of 1 Macc.). The English reader will find a convenient translation with commentary by W. Oesterley in CAP i. 1-66; the older commentary by C. Grimm in O. Fritzsche, Kurzgefasstes exegetisches Handbuch zu den Apokryphen, 1853, is still valuable; also useful is a recent German translation with commentary by H. Bévenot, Die beiden Makkabäerbücher (in Feldmann und Herkenne, Die heilige Schrift), 1931; the topography of the Maccabean campaigns is discussed by Père F. Abel in RB xxii-xxv, 1923-1926. hard pressed by him,<sup>a</sup> Menelaus and the Tobiads withdrew, and going to Antiochus informed him that they wished to abandon their country's laws and the way of life prescribed by these, and to follow the king's laws and adopt the Greek way of life.<sup>a</sup> Accordingly, they petitioned him to permit them to build a gymnasium in Jerusalem. And when he had granted this, they also concealed<sup>a</sup> the circumcision of their private parts in order to<sup>a</sup> be Greeks even when unclothed, and giving up whatever other national customs they had, they imitated the practices of foreign nations.<sup>b</sup> chronology and the date of the beginning of the Seleucid era used in 1 Macc. see Appendix J. I follow Bickermann in taking Oct. 312 B.C. as the beginning of the era for events of Seleucid history, and Nisan (roughly April) 311 B.C. for events of internal Jewish history.

<sup>b</sup> 1 Macc. i. 11 ff. places these attempts at hellenization in "those days," i.e. after the accession of Antiochus Epiphanes, while 2 Macc. iv. 10 ff. ascribes them to the high priest Jason, earlier, in the reign of Seleucus IV. Tscherikower, p. 205, makes the interesting suggestion that Jason and the hellenizers really wanted to establish a Greek polis in Jerusalem in order to secure the economic privileges enjoyed by Hellenistic cities.

<sup>c</sup> Josephus is apparently referring to the very brief statement in B.J. i. 31 that "when Antiochus Epiphanes was disputing with Ptolemy VI the suzerainty of Syria, dissension arose among the Jewish nobles," although nothing is said there about the intervention of the Romans. Some scholars, therefore, consider this one of the non-verifiable cross-hood of Memphis and taken possession of this city, he set out for Alexandria with the intention of reducing it by siege and getting into his power the Ptolemy<sup>a</sup> who was reigning there. He was, however, repelled not only from Alexandria, but also from the whole of Egypt, for the Romans instructed him to keep away from the country,<sup>b</sup> as we have already related somewhere in an earlier passage.<sup>c</sup> But I shall give a detailed account of this king, how he became master of Judaea and the temple; for since in my first work I mentioned these things only in summary fashion, I have thought it necessary now to go back and give a more exact account of them.

(3) King Antiochus, then, returning from Egypt through fear of the Romans, marched against the city of Jerusalem, and entering it in the hundred and forty-third year of the Seleucid reign,<sup>d</sup> took the city without a battle, for the gates were opened to him by those who were of his party. And having become master of Jerusalem in this way, he killed many of those who were in opposition,<sup>e</sup> and taking large sums of money as spoil,<sup>f</sup> he returned to Antioch.

references (on which see the Appendix in the last volume of this translation). Even if Josephus is referring to a passage which is either non-existent or non-extant, it may be that in doing so he was under the impression that he had written about the Romans and Antiochus in B.J., but did not take the trouble to look up the earlier passage. I hardly think that Reinach, following Destinon, is justified in labelling the present cross-reference an "étourderie," and holding that the formula "as we have already related, etc." is mechanically copied from his source, since he is here apparently paraphrasing the source, not copying it verbatim.

<sup>a</sup> 168 B.C. The 145th yr. Sel. extended from Oct. 168 to Oct. 167 B.C.; the second invasion, therefore, was only a little more than a year after the first, according to our reckoning, not "two years later," as the first invasion fell in the second half of the 143rd yr. Sel. and the second invasion in the first half of the 145th yr. Sel., but the interval was counted as 2 yrs. See further Bickermann, GM, pp. 160-168.

<sup>f</sup> i.e. on the first occasion Antiochus had spared some of the inhabitants because he hoped through them to get the wealth of the temple. The Gr. may, however, mean that on this occasion his greed caused him to kill even his Jewish partisans.

and left nothing at all behind,<sup>a</sup> thereby throwing the Jews into deep mourning. Moreover he forbade them to offer the daily sacrifices which they used to offer to God in accordance with their law, and after plundering the entire city, he killed some of the people, and some he took captive together with their wives and children, so that the number of those taken alive came to some ten thousand.<sup>b</sup> And he burnt the finest parts<sup>c</sup> of the city, and pulling down the walls, built the Akra (citadel) in the Lower City<sup>d</sup>; for it was high enough to overlook the temple, and it was for this reason that he fortified it with high walls and towers, and stationed a Macedonian garrison therein. Nonetheless there remained in the Akra those of the people who were impious and of bad character, and at their hands the citizens were destined to suffer many terrible things.<sup>e</sup> The king also built a pagan altar upon the temple-altar, and distinguishing it from the earlier, Persian and pre-Hasmonaean citadel north of the temple (cf. Neh. ii. 8 ff., Aristeas §§ 100 ff., Ant. xii. 133 ff., 2 Macc. iv. 12 ff.) which was rebuilt by the later Hasmonaean (cf. Ant. xv. 403) and again by Herod, who named it Antonia (cf. Ant. xviii. 91, B.J. v. 238 ff. : its site and structure have recently been discussed by Père H. Vincent in RB xlii., 1933, pp. 83-113). The Seleucid citadel is located on the southern spur of the eastern hill also by E. Meyer, Ursprung ii. 158, Dalman, Sacred Sites, p. 273; cf. also Tramontano, pp. 86 ff., who agrees substantially with Schürer.

<sup>a</sup> 1 Macc. i. 34 says that the citadel was occupied by an ἔθνος ἀμαρτωλόν, ἄνδρας παρανόμους "a sinful nation, lawless men," probably intending the latter phrase to be in apposition with the "sinful nation" and meaning the Syrians. Josephus, however, assumes that two different groups are meant, the Syrian soldiers and the renegade Jews; the latter are mentioned separately in vs. 52 as the cause of much evil to the land. See further Bickermann, GM, pp. 71-73.

<sup>a</sup> 1 Macc. does not mention the sacrifice of swine on the temple altar (although i. 44 ff. might be taken to imply this, since the sacrifice of swine in "the cities of Judah" is mentioned in connexion with the profanation of the temple); vs. 54 speaks of the erection on the temple-altar of a βδέλυγμα ἐρημώσεως, which is the Gr. equivalent of the šiqqâš m'šômēm A.V. "abomination that maketh desolate") in Dan. xi. 31, xii. 11; this term, according to Nestle (ap. Montgomery, 130

slaughtered swine thereon,<sup>a</sup> thereby practising a form of sacrifice neither lawful nor native to the religion of the Jews. And he compelled them to give up the worship of their own God, and to do reverence to the gods in whom he believed; he then commanded them to build sacred places in every city and village, and to set up altars on which to sacrifice swine daily. He also ordered them not to circumcise their children, threatening to punish anyone who might be found acting contrary to these orders. He also appointed overseers who should assist in compelling them to carry out his instructions. And so, many of the Jews, some willingly, others through fear of the punishment which had been prescribed, followed the practices ordained by the king, but the worthiest people and those of noble soul disregarded him, and held their country's customs of greater account than the punishment with which he threatened them if they disobeyed; and being on that account maltreated daily, and enduring bitter torments, they met their death. Indeed, they were whipped, their bodies were mutilated,<sup>b</sup> and while still alive and breathing, they were crucified,<sup>c</sup> while their wives and the sons whom they had circumcised in despite of the king's wishes were strangled, the children being made to Accordingly, they sent envoys to Antiochus with a letter in which they made the following statements. <sup>a</sup> Probably to be identified with Apollonius the Mysarch sent to Jerusalem by Antiochus in 168 B.C., cf. § 248 note c. Willrich, Urkundenfälschung, p. 15, believes that Josephus here designates Apollonius governor (meridarch) of Samaria on the basis of 1 Macc. iii. 10, which says that Apollonius set out from Samaria with an army to attack Judaea.

<sup>b</sup> Grimm identifies Nicanor with the Nicanor, son of Patroclus, mentioned in 2 Macc. viii. 9 ff. (cf. § 298 note b) as one of the king's ministers who hoped to raise money for the payment of the Seleucid indemnity to Rome by selling Jewish captives as slaves.

<sup>c</sup> Zeus Xenios ("protector of strangers") according to 2 Macc. vi. 2. The latter reading is preferred by Cook, Rel., p. 188, who writes, "the hospitable Zeus would reflect oriental ideas illustrated both in the old 'covenant god' of Shechem and in Allah as the protector of guest-clients"; so, earlier, 134

To this petition of the Samaritans the king wrote the following reply. "King Antiochus to Nicanor. Freudenthal, Hell. Stud., p. 77 note, on the ground that the Samaritans would have worshipped the Phœnician Baal-Moloch (cf. Ant. viii. 145 note d) in the form of Zeus Xenios. Montgomery, Sam., p. 77 note, makes the interesting conjecture that the epithet Xenios "may have been suggested by the first syllable of Gerizim, ger, i.e. 'stranger'" (in this connexion we may note that a Samaritan writer, "Pseudo-Eupolemus," ap. Eusebius, Praep. Evang. ix. 17, interprets the name Mount Gerizim - Ἀργαριζὶν as ὄρος ὑψίστου "Mount of the Most High"; this, of course, does not decide the question which epithet is correct). The epithet Hellenios would be the probable choice only if the Samaritans were stressing their Greek sympathies (cf. § 263 and Ant. xi. 344) while Xenios would be suitable whether they thought primarily of their Greek sympathies or their Phœnician (or Shechemite) origin. On the whole, Xenios is more likely to have been correct.

(vi. 1) At this same time there was a man living in the village<sup>d</sup> of Modai<sup>e</sup> in Judaea, named Mattathias, the son of Joannes, the son of Symeon, the son of Asamonaio<sup>f</sup>, a priest of the course<sup>g</sup> of Joarib<sup>h</sup> and a native of Jerusalem. "Hyrkanios" a corruption of "Kronios"? It seems strange, to be sure, that an Attic rather than a Macedonian month should be named in either passage, but Niese, Kritik, p. 107, argues that Antiochus "who introduced the Attic documentary style into Antioch" might well have adopted Attic month-names as well.

(2) But there came to the village <sup>f</sup> of Modai the officers appointed by the king to compel the Jews to carry out his ordinances, and they ordered the inhabitants to sacrifice as the king had ordered; and as Mattathias was held in esteem because of various things and especially because of his goodly sons, they invited him to be the first to sacrifice—for, they said his fellow-citizens would follow him, and for that reason he would be honoured by the king—, but Mattathias refused to do so, saying that even if all the other nations obeyed the commands of Antiochus whether through fear or through desire to please <sup>g</sup> he himself and his sons <sup>h</sup> would never be persuaded to abandon their native form of worship. But when he had ceased speaking, one of the Jews came forward and in their midst sacrificed as Antiochus had commanded, whereupon Mattathias in rage rushed upon did not even stop up the entrances to the caves. And they forbore to resist because of the day, being unwilling to violate the dignity of the Sabbath even when in difficulties, for the law requires us to rest on that day. And so about a thousand with their wives and children died by suffocation in the caves; but many escaped and joined Mattathias, whom they appointed their leader. And he instructed them to fight even on the Sabbath, saying that if for the sake of observing the law they failed to do so, they would be their own enemies, for their foes would attack them on that day, and unless they resisted, nothing would prevent them from all perishing without striking a blow. These words persuaded them, and to this day we continue the practice of fighting even on the Sabbath whenever it becomes necessary.<sup>a</sup> So Mattathias gathered a large force round him,<sup>b</sup> and pulled down the pagan altars, and killed as many of those who had sinned as he could lay his hands on—for many of them in fear of him had scattered among the neighbouring nations; and as for the boys who had not been circumcised, he ordered them to be circumcised, and drove out the officers who had been appointed to prevent this.

fight on the Sabbath when
1 Macc.
ii. 40.

(3) But after being in command for a year, he fell initiative in this action is not attributed to Mattathias, and suggests that Josephus has here the intention of justifying his co-religionists for having fought on the Sabbath in the war with Rome. But 1 Macc. does attribute the initiative to Mattathias and his friends, and just about as much stress is laid on this episode in 1 Macc. as in Josephus' text. I doubt, therefore, whether Reinach's point is well taken.

Melamed, MGWJ lxxii., 1928, pp. 202-204, to καὶ ἀνήγαγε τὴν δύναμιν αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀνέβη ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰούδαν καὶ ἀνέβη μετ' αὐτοῦ παρεμβολή on the theory that the original Heb. had wayy-<sup>h</sup>asôph "he gathered together," but the Gr. translator read wayyôsisôph "he continued." That Josephus has συναγαγὼν is not in itself clear evidence that he used a Heb. text of 1 Macc. (on which cf. F. Perles in REJ lxxxi., 1921, p. 179), since he may easily have guessed the Heb. lying behind the

But when Seron, who was governor of Coele-Syria,<sup>b</sup> heard that many had joined themselves to Judas, and that he had already surrounded himself with a force to be reckoned with in a contest of war, he decided to march against him, considering it his duty to try to punish those who had violated the king's commands. He therefore gathered together whatever force he had, and having also enrolled the fugitives and irreligious men among the Jews, he came against Judas; and having advanced <sup>c</sup> as far as the village of Baithoron<sup>d</sup> in Judaea, he encamped there. But Judas, meeting him there and intending to engage him, saw that his soldiers were shrinking from the battle because of their small number and lack of food—for they had fasted,<sup>e</sup>—and so he began to encourage them, saying that victory and mastery

Gr. reading, or have supplied the inevitable συναγαγών. In this connexion, however, it may be worth while to mention Michaelis' suggestion (ap. Grimm) that Josephus' Σήρων δ' ὁ τῆς κοίλης Συρίας στρατηγός above is based on Heb. šar hēl 'Arām "commander of the army of Syria," which Josephus, taking hēl to mean "valley," translated "governor of Coele-Syria"; unfortunately, as Grimm remarks, hēl (construct of hayl) does not mean "valley" in Hebrew (though we have haylā "valley" in Aramaic); this too may be an instance of Josephus' guessing at the Heb. (or Aram.) original underlying his Gr. text of 1 Macc. There can be no question of his use of a Gr. text; whether he also had a Semitic text is doubtful.

<sup>a</sup> In 1 Macc. Judas does not allude to their forefathers; Josephus may here be thinking of Mattathias' dying speech, 1 Macc. ii. 50 ff., cf. §§ 279 ff.

over the enemy lay not in numbers, but in being pious toward the Deity. And of this they had the clearest example in their forefathers, who because of their righteousness and their struggles on behalf of their own laws and children had many times defeated many tens of thousands <sup>a</sup>; for, he said, in doing no wrong there is a mighty force. By saying this he persuaded his men to hold in contempt the great numbers of their adversaries and to encounter Seron, and so, after engaging the Syrians, he routed them, for when their commander fell,<sup>b</sup> they all made haste to flee, thinking that their safety lay in that. But Judas pursued them as far as the plain, and killed about eight hundred of the enemy: the rest, however, escaped to the sea-coast.<sup>c</sup>

(2) Hearing of this, King Antiochus was greatly incensed by what had happened, and having collected all of his own forces and taking with him many mercenaries from the islands,<sup>d</sup> he made preparations to invade Judaea about the beginning of the spring.<sup>e</sup> But when he had distributed the soldiers' pay, he saw that his treasuries were failing and that there was a lack of money—for not all the tribute had been paid because of uprisings among the (subject) nations,<sup>f</sup> and also, being munificent and liberal with gifts, he had not limited himself to his actual resources,<sup>g</sup> —

<sup>a</sup> According to 1 Macc. iii. 32 Lysias was "of the family of the kingdom," ἀπὸ τοῦ γένους τῆς βασιλείας: cf. 2 Macc. xi. 1, συγγενὴς "kinsman (of the king)"; this is not to be taken literally, but in the sense of a noble of high rank, cf. Bevan, II. Sel. ii. 281. He had lately been governor of Coele-Syria and Phoenicia, according to 2 Macc. x. 11, and if that is true, Josephus is mistaken in calling Seron governor of Coele-Syria at this time, cf. § 288 notes b and c.

<sup>b</sup> Niese conjectures from the Lat. that after "held in honour by him" the words "and gave him" have fallen out. But if we accept Hudson's emendation (see next note), the text may be allowed to stand.

and so he decided first to go to Persia and collect the tribute of that country. He therefore left in charge of the government a certain Lysias,<sup>a</sup> who was held in honour by him<sup>b</sup> and ruled over the country from<sup>c</sup> the Euphrates river as far as the borders of Egypt and Lower Asia,<sup>d</sup> and he also left behind a part of his force and his elephants; and he charged Lysias to bring up his son Antiochus<sup>e</sup> with the greatest care until he returned, and when he had subdued Judaea and reduced its inhabitants to slavery, to make an end of Jerusalem and destroy the Jewish race. Having given these instructions to Lysias, King Antiochus marched away to Persia in the hundred and forty-seventh year,<sup>f</sup> and after he had crossed the Euphrates, went on into the Upper Satrapies.<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup> If for διέποντα "ruled over," conjectured by Hudson from the Lat., we retain the mss. reading διήκοντα "extending," we shall have to accept Niese's further conjecture that the Gr. has lost two words after "held in honour by him," and read "and gave him the country extending from," etc.

<sup>f</sup> The 147th year Sel. extended from Oct. 166 to Oct. 165 B.C. Although 1 Macc. speaks of Persia, it probably refers to Antiochus' first eastern campaign, against Artaxias, king of Armenia, cf. Appian, Syr. 45, Diod. Sic. xxxi. 17. The passage in Tacitus, Hist. v. 8 probably refers to Antiochus Sidetes' expedition against the Parthians (cf. Ant. xiii. 253), not to Antiochus Epiphanes, cf. W. <sup>a</sup> He bears the surname of Macon in 2 Macc. x. 12; he had been Egyptian governor of Cyprus under Ptolemy Philometor (Polyb. xxvii. 13), but deserted to Antiochus Epiphanes (2 Macc. x. 13). Apparently he succeeded Lysias (or Seron?), cf. above, p. 152 note a).

<sup>b</sup> The son of Patroclus, according to 2 Macc. viii. 9. If he is the same person as the Nicanor sent against Judas by Demetrius, who is said to have escaped from Rome with Demetrius in 162 B.C. (1 Macc. vii. 26-§§ 402 ff., cf. Polyb. xxxi. 14), we must suppose that he went to Rome some time after Lysias assumed the regency.

Dorymenes,<sup>a</sup> and Nicanor<sup>b</sup> and Gorgias,<sup>c</sup> persons of power among the Friends<sup>d</sup> of the king, and giving over to them a force of forty thousand foot-soldiers and seven thousand horsemen, sent them out against Judaea. And when they had gone as far as the city of Emmaus,<sup>e</sup> they encamped in the plain. Then there came to them allies from Syria and the surrounding territory, and many of the Jewish refugees,<sup>f</sup> and also certain slave-dealers, who with the intention of buying the expected captives brought chains with which to bind those who might be taken, and a store of gold and silver to pay for them. But when Judas caught sight of the camp and the great numbers of his adversaries, he tried to persuade his own soldiers to have courage, and exhorted them to place their hopes of victory in God and to make supplication to Him dressed in sackcloth according to their ancestral custom, and by exhibiting to Him this form of supplication, usual in time of great danger, to constrain Him to grant them victory over their foes.<sup>g</sup> Then he

If this Emmaus is the same as that mentioned in Luke xxiv. 13, we must assume that Luke's reckoning of 60 stades (c. 7 miles) for its distance from Jerusalem is an error (but a v.l. gives 160 stades = 18 miles); cf. Dalman, Sacred Sites, pp. 226 ff., and Dr. Thackeray's note on B.J. vii. 217, which mentions another Emmaus, 30 stades (c. 3 miles) from Jerusalem.

For if you now fight bravely, you may recover that liberty which is loved for its own sake by all men, but to you most of all happens to be desirable because it gives you the right to worship the Deity. Since, therefore, at the present moment it lies in your power either to recover this liberty and regain a happy and blessed life"—by this he meant a life in accordance with the laws and customs of their fathers—"or to suffer the most shameful fate and to leave your race without any seed by being cowardly in battle, exert yourselves accordingly, bearing in mind that death is the portion even of those who do not fight, and holding firmly to the belief that if you die for such precious causes as liberty, country, laws and religion, you will gain eternal glory. Make ready, therefore, and be prepared in spirit<sup>d</sup> so that at daybreak to-morrow you may meet the enemy."

(4) These were the words which Judas spoke to encourage his army. But the enemy sent Gorgias with five thousand foot-soldiers and a thousand horsemen to fall upon Judas by night, for which purpose he took some of the Jewish refugees as guides <sup>a</sup>; and when the son of Mattathias became aware of this, he decided to fall upon the enemy's camp himself, and to do this when their force was divided. Having, therefore, supped in good time and left many fires in his camp,<sup>b</sup> he marched all night toward those of the enemy who were in Emmaus. And when Gorgias found that his foes were not in their camp, he suspected that they had withdrawn and hidden themselves in the mountains, and so he decided to go in search of them wherever they might be. But near dawn Judas appeared before the enemy at Emmaus with three thousand men poorly armed because of their poverty, and when he saw that his foes were excellently protected and had shown great skill in taking up their position, he urged his own men <sup>c</sup> on, saying that they must fight even if with unarmed bodies, and that the Deity had on other occasions in the past given the victory over more numerous and well-armed enemies to men in their condition because He admired their courage,<sup>d</sup> and he ordered the trumpeters to sound the signal. <sup>b</sup> So most mss. of Josephus and 1 Macc.: variant Judaea. Since Idumaea lay rather to the S.E. of this region, the reading seems strange, unless as Abel and Bénénot assume, "Idumaea" is here used as a vague term for the non-Jewish territory S. of Judaea.

ing terror into their hearts and throwing them into confusion, he killed many of those who opposed him, while the rest he pursued as far as Gazara <sup>a</sup> and the plains of Idumaea <sup>b</sup> and Azotus <sup>c</sup> and Jamneia, <sup>d</sup> and of these there fell some three thousand. Judas, however, exhorted his soldiers not to be too hungry for spoil, for there still awaited them a contest and battle against Gorgias and the force with him; but, he said, when they had conquered these also, then they might take spoil in security, having only this task and nothing else to undertake.<sup>e</sup> But while he was still addressing his soldiers in these words, the men with Gorgias looked down from the heights and saw that the army which they had left in the camp had been routed, and that the camp had been burned; for the smoke brought to them from a distance evidence of what had happened. Accordingly, when the men with Gorgias discovered that this was how things were, and perceived that Judas' men were ready for battle, they too became frightened and turned to flee.<sup>f</sup> Thereupon Judas, with the knowledge that the soldiers with Gorgias had been defeated without fighting, returned and carried off the spoil, and taking much gold and silver and stuffs of donians call Apellaïos,<sup>a</sup> they kindled the lights on the lampstand and burned incense on the altar and set out the loaves on the table and offered whole burnt-offerings upon the new altar. These things, as it chanced, took place on the same day on which, three years before, their holy service had been transformed into an impure and profane form of worship. For the temple, after being made desolate by Antiochus, had remained so for three years <sup>b</sup>; it was in the hundred and forty-fifth year that these things befell the temple, on the twenty-fifth of the month Apellaïos, in the hundred and fifty-third Olympiad.<sup>c</sup> And the temple was renovated on the same day, the twenty-fifth of the month Apellaïos, in the hundred and forty-eighth year, in the hundred and fifty-fourth Olympiad.<sup>d</sup> Now the desolation of the temple came about in accordance with the prophecy of Daniel, which had been made four hundred and eight years before <sup>e</sup>; for he had revealed that the Macedonians would destroy it.

There Judas met him with ten thousand men, and seeing the great number of the enemy, he prayed to God to be his ally against them, <sup>e</sup> and on engaging the enemy's skirmishers, <sup>f</sup> defeated them and slew about five thousand of them, thereby becoming an object of fear to the rest. Indeed, <sup>g</sup> when Lysias saw the spirit of the Jews and that they were prepared to die if they could not live as free men, he feared this desperate resolution of theirs as strength, <sup>h</sup> and taking the remainder of his force, he returned to Antioch, where he remained to enlist mercenaries and make preparations to invade Judaea with a greater army.

<sup>a</sup> Variant (after "sacrifices"), "and they honoured God with songs of praise and the playing of harps, and rejoiced."

<sup>b</sup> Josephus explains the name "festival of Lights" as referring to the sudden deliverance which was like a light appearing in the darkness of despair (a somewhat similar explanation is given in the scholion to Megillath Ta'anith, "because they went out from oppression to deliverance" they made Hanukkah a permanent festival): it is puzzling, however, that he does not directly connect the name with the kindling of lights in the temple lampstand (cf. above, § 319). In connexion with the 8 days of the celebration, the scholion to Megillath Ta'anith briefly relates the finding of the single jar of oil which would have sufficed for only one day's illumination had not a miracle caused it to last 8 days; for other rabbinic passages cf. Schürer i. 209 note 61, or the more playing of harps, at the same time delighted them.<sup>a</sup> So much pleasure did they find in the renewal of their customs and in unexpectedly obtaining the right to have their own service after so long a time, that they made a law that their descendants should celebrate the restoration of the temple service for eight days. And from that time to the present we observe this festival, which we call the festival of Lights, giving this name to it, I think, from the fact that the right to worship appeared to us at a time when we hardly dared hope for it.<sup>b</sup> Then Judas erected walls round the city,<sup>c</sup> and having built high towers against the incursions of the enemy, he placed guards in them; and he also fortified the city of Bethsura in order that he might use it as a fortress in any emergency caused by the enemy.<sup>d</sup>

recent work of O. Rankin, The Origin of the Festival of Hanukkah, 1930. In 2 Macc. the festival is called "Tabernacles (σκηνοπηγία) of the month of Kislew"; the usual rabbinic name is Hanukkah "dedication," cf. ἐγκαίνια in John x. 22, and the texts cited by Strack-Billerbeck, ad loc., ii. 539. Derenbourg, p. 62 note 2, suggests that the name "Lights," which is not found elsewhere, may go back to an abbreviation of Heb. y'mē nērōth šel Hanukkah "days of (the festival of) the lights of dedication." The practice of lighting candles on each of the eight days of the festival (one on the first day, two on the second, etc.) is still observed by the majority of Jews.

And falling upon the Idumaeans, the descendants of Esau,<sup>b</sup> at Akrobatene,<sup>c</sup> he killed many of them and took their spoil. He also hemmed in the Baanites,<sup>d</sup> who were ambushing the Jews, and after besieging them closely, burned their towers and destroyed their men. Then he set out from there against the Ammanites, who had a great and numerous force, which was led by Timotheus. And when he had subdued them also, he took the city of Jazora,<sup>e</sup> and after taking captive their wives and children,<sup>f</sup> and burning the city,<sup>g</sup> he returned to Judaea. <sup>a</sup> 1 Macc. Jazer, identified by Père Abel with modern Khirbet Šār, c. 10 miles W. of 'Ammān and c. 7 miles N.E. of 'Arāq el-'Emīr. Perhaps this identification finds support in the mention (1 Macc. v. 13) of the Jews in the territory of Tobias (ἐν τοῖς Τοβίου) if this means the Tobiad stronghold at 'Arāq el-'Emīr (cf. § 230 note c), and not the bibl. Tob, S.E. of the Sea of Galilee.

<sup>f</sup> The reference here to wives and children, not mentioned in 1 Macc. in connexion with Jazer, may, as Reinach assumes, be due to Josephus' misunderstanding of the phrase τὴν Ἰαζήρ καὶ τὰς θυγατέρας "Jazer and its daughters (i.e. daughter-cities)"; it seems rather strange, however, that Josephus should have misunderstood so common a bibl. idiom, and the phrase may have been added to conform with the verse below (1 Macc. v. 13 = § 330) which mentions the wives and children of the Jews taken captive by Timotheus—these not being referred to by Josephus.

neighbouring nations, on learning that he had returned, gathered together in Galaaditis <sup>a</sup> against the Jews who were in their borders. But these fled to the fortress of Diathema <sup>b</sup> and sent to Judas, informing him that Timotheus was making an effort to seize the place in which they had taken refuge. And while these letters were being read, there came messengers from Galilee also, announcing that a force had been raised against him by those in Ptolemais, <sup>c</sup> Tyre and Sidon and the other nations <sup>d</sup> of Galilee.

(2) Judas, therefore, considering what had to be done in both these cases of need which had been reported, commanded his brother Simon to take some three thousand of the picked men and go out to the help of the Jews in Galilee, while he himself and his other brother Jonathan with eight thousand soldiers set out for Galaaditis; and over the remainder of the force he left Joseph, the son of Zacharias, and Azarias, whom he commanded to guard Judaea carefully and not to join battle with anyone until he himself returned. And so Simon went to Galilee, and engaging the foe, put them to flight, and after pursuing them as far as the gates of Ptolemais, killed about three thousand of them; then taking the spoil of the slain, money to join his campaign, he led his army across the stream opposite Romphon<sup>a</sup>—this was a city—and exhorted his soldiers, if they engaged the Jews in battle, to fight eagerly and prevent them from crossing the stream ; for, he predicted, if the Jews crossed, they themselves would be defeated. But when Judas heard that Timotheus had made ready for battle, he took all his own force and hastened to meet the enemy ; and after crossing the stream, he fell upon his foes, and slew some of them who opposed him, and struck fear into the others and forced them to throw away their arms and flee. Karnaim and Ashtaroth are coupled in Gen. xiv. 5 and Jubilees xxix. 10.

by the name of Emphron,<sup>a</sup> which lay on his road, as it was not possible for him to avoid it by taking another road,<sup>b</sup> and being unwilling to turn back, he sent to the inhabitants and requested them to open their gates and permit him to go on through their city; for they had blocked the gates with stones, and had cut off any passage through it. The Emphraeans, however, would not consent to this, and so he urged on his men and surrounded the city and besieged it, and after investing it for a day and a night, he took the city, and killed all the males who were in it, and burned it all down,<sup>c</sup> and so made a way; but so great was the number of the slain that they had to walk over their dead bodies. And after crossing the Jordan, they came to the Great Plain, in front of which lies Bethsane,<sup>d</sup> by the Greeks called Scythopolis. And setting out from there, they came to Judaea, playing harps and singing songs of praise and observing such forms of merry-making as are customary at celebrations of a victory<sup>e</sup>; then they offered the sacrifices of thanksgiving for their successes and for the safety of their army, for not one of the Jews had met death in these wars.

<sup>e</sup> In place of the sentence about Judas' cleverness 1 Macc. gives the explanation that Joseph and Azariah were defeated were in Galaaditis—they too wished to acquire the reputation of being generals valiant in action, and so they took their force and went to Jamneia.<sup>a</sup> But Gorgias,<sup>b</sup> the commander of Jamneia, met them there, and in the engagement which took place they lost two thousand men of their army, and fleeing, were pursued<sup>c</sup> as far as the borders<sup>d</sup> of Judaea. This reverse befell them because they disobeyed the instructions of Judas not to engage anyone in battle before his arrival; for in addition to the other instances of Judas' cleverness, one might well admire him also for having foreseen that such a reverse would come to the men under Joseph and Azarias if they departed in any respect from the instructions given them.<sup>e</sup> Meanwhile Judas and his brothers were warring on the Idumaeans<sup>f</sup> without ceasing, and pressed them closely on all sides; and after taking the city of Hebron, they destroyed all its fortifications and burned its towers<sup>g</sup>; and they ravaged the foreign territory, including the city of Marisa,<sup>h</sup> and coming to Azotus,<sup>i</sup> they took this city and sacked it.<sup>j</sup> Then they returned to Judaea, carrying much spoil and booty.

<sup>b</sup> So 1 Mace., probably referring to the province, not the city, of Elymais = bibl. Elam, and corresponding to Susiana, the eighth in the list of provinces of Darius' empire, as given by Herodotus. According to 2 Mace. ix. 2 it was Persepolis that Antiochus attempted to despoil.

<sup>c</sup> So Polyb. xxxi. 9 (11). 1, cf. Jerome on Dan. xi., who gives the Latin form Diana, citing Polybius and Diodorus; Appian, Syria 66, gives the goddess's name as Aphrodite; 1 Mace. omits her name. Both names, Artemis and Aphro-

(ix. 1) About the same time King Antiochus, as he was entering the upper country,<sup>a</sup> heard of a city in Persia of surpassing wealth, named Elymais,<sup>b</sup> and that there was in it a rich temple of Artemis,<sup>c</sup> which was full of all kinds of dedicatory offerings, as well as of arms and breastplates which he learned had been left behind by Alexander, the son of Philip, king of Macedon. And so, being excited by these reports, he set out for Elymais, and assaulted it and began a siege. As those within the city, however, were not dismayed either by his attack or by the siege, but stoutly held out against him, his hopes were dashed; for they drove him off from the city, and went out against him in pursuit, so that he had to come to Babylon<sup>d</sup> as a fugitive, and lost many of his army. And as he was grieving over this failure, some men brought him news also of the defeat of the generals whom he had left to make war on the Jews, and of the strength which the Jews now had. And so, with the anxiety over these events added to his former anxiety, he was overwhelmed, and in his despondency fell ill; and as his illness lingered on, and his sufferings increased, he perceived that he was about to die ; he therefore called together his friends and told them that his illness was severe, and confessed <sup>a</sup> that he was suffering these afflictions because he had harmed the Jewish nation by despoiling their temple and treating God with contempt ; and with these words he expired. Accordingly I am <sup>b</sup> surprised that Polybius of Megalopolis, who is an honest man, says that Antiochus died because he wished to despoil the temple of Artemis in Persia <sup>c</sup> ; for merely to wish a thing without actually doing it is not deserving of punishment. But although Polybius may think that Antiochus lost his life on that account, it is much more probable that the king died because of sacrilegiously despoiling the temple in Jerusalem. Concerning this matter, however, I shall not dispute with those who believe that the cause given by the Megalopolitan is nearer the truth than that given by us.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>a</sup> So 1 Macc.; Polybius gives the name of the city in which Antiochus died as Tabae in Persia. This is probably an error for Gabae, a city in Gabiane, a sub-province (eparchia) of Elymais, according to Strabo xv. 728 and xvi. 745. Ecbatana is given in 2 Macc. ix. 3 as the name of the city where Antiochus heard the news of the Jews' successes in the West; this, in turn, is identified by Kugler, pp. 387 ff., with Aspadana (mod. Isfahan), once apparently called Gai or Gabae. Niese, GLMS iii. 218 note 3, corrects Polybius' Tabae to Gabae, but in Kritik, pp. 19 f., suggests that here 2 Macc. confuses Antiochus Epiphanes with Antiochus Sidetes. See now W. W. Tarn, The Greeks in Bactria, pp. 463-466.

(2) Now before he died, Antiochus summoned Philip, one of his companions,<sup>e</sup> and appointed him regent of his kingdom, and giving him his diadem and robe and seal-ring, ordered him to take these and give them to his son Antiochus ; and he requested Philip to look after his son's education and to guard the kingdom for him.<sup>f</sup> And Antiochus died in the hundred and forty-ninth year.<sup>a</sup> Then Lysias, after informing the people of his death, appointed his son Antiochus king—for he had charge of him,—and called him Eupator.

(3) At this time the garrison in the Akra of Jerusalem and the Jewish renegades <sup>b</sup> did much harm to the Jews; for when they went up to the temple with the intention of sacrificing, the garrison would sally out and kill them—for the Akra commanded the temple.<sup>c</sup> And so, as a result of these experiences, Judas determined to drive out the garrison, and gathering together all the people, he stoutly besieged those in the Akra. This was in the hundred and fiftieth year of the Seleucid reign.<sup>d</sup> Accordingly, he constructed siege-engines, and erected earthworks, and assiduously applied himself to the capture of the Akra. But many of the renegades within the Akra went out by night into the country, and having gathered together some of the irreligious men like themselves, came to King Antiochus <sup>e</sup> and said that they did not deserve to be left to suffer these hardships at the hands of their countrymen, especially as they were enduring them for the sake of his father, is, before Oct. 164 B.C. Kugler, pp. 390 ff., dates Antiochus' death in March or April, 164 B.C.

<sup>a</sup> The Jewish renegades are not mentioned at this point in 1 Macc. They are, indeed, mentioned further on, in vs. 21, καὶ ἐκολλήθησαν αὐτοῖς (the Syrians) τινὲς τῶν ἀσεβῶν ἐξ Ἰσραήλ, but 1 Macc. does not say that they were in the Akra, as Josephus states in § 364: cf. §§ 252 note c, 305 note a.

for they had broken with their ancestral religion and had adopted that which he had commanded them to follow ; and now, they continued, the citadel was in danger of being taken by Judas and his men, as well as the garrison stationed there by the king, unless some assistance were sent by him. When the young Antiochus heard this, he became angry, and sending for his officers and Friends, ordered them to collect mercenaries and those in his kingdom who were of military age. And so an army was collected, which consisted of about a hundred thousand foot-soldiers and twenty thousand horsemen <sup>a</sup> and thirty-two elephants.

(4) Thereupon he took this force and set out from Antioch with Lysias, who was in command of the entire army, and after coming to Idumaea, he went up from there to Bethsura,<sup>b</sup> a very strong city and one difficult to take, and he invested the city and besieged it. However, as the people of Bethsura strongly resisted and burned his supply of siege-engines—for they sallied out against him,—much time was consumed in the siege. And when Judas heard of the king's advance, he left off besieging the Akra, and went to meet the king, pitching his camp near the mountain passes, at a place called Bethzacharias,<sup>c</sup>

5000 horsemen and 80 elephants (2 Macc. has 110,000 foot-soldiers, 5300 horsemen and 22 elephants). On the number of elephants (32) given above, Abrahams, Cam-paigns, p. 30, remarks, "this agrees with Polybius who (in the procession at Antioch in 165 B.C.), in addition to a few chariot elephants, describes the presence of 'thirty-six elephants in single file, with all their furniture on.' which was seventy stades <sup>a</sup> away from the enemy. Thereupon the king set out from Bethsura and led his army to the passes and Judas' camp; and at day-break he drew up his army for battle.<sup>b</sup> And he made his elephants follow one another, since they could not be placed side by side in an extended line because of the narrow space.<sup>c</sup> Round each elephant there advanced together a thousand foot soldiers and five hundred horsemen; and the elephants carried high <sup>d</sup> towers and archers.<sup>e</sup> He also made the rest of his force ascend the mountains on either side, putting his light-armed troops <sup>f</sup> in front of them. Then he ordered his army to raise the battle-cry, and set upon the enemy, uncovering his shields of gold <sup>g</sup> and bronze so that a brilliant light was given off by them, while the mountains re-echoed the shouts of his men. Judas saw this, and yet was not terrified, but valiantly met the enemy's charge, and slew some six hundred of their skirmishers. And his brother Eleazar, whom they

<sup>e</sup> 1 Mace. gives the number of men in the tower or howdah as 30 (c.l. 32), an impossible number, plausibly explained by Rahlfs, Z.N.W., N.F. xi., 1934, pp. 78 ff., as a corruption of Δ' = 4 to Α' = 30. Perhaps Josephus has omitted this detail because of its incredibility.

<sup>g</sup> The shields of gold (also mentioned in 1 Mace.) are a fictitious detail. Polybius tells us, xi. 9. 1, that Philopoemen had his soldiers keep their arms bright in order to inspire the enemy with fear.

(5) Thereupon Judas, seeing how strong the enemy was, retired to Jerusalem <sup>c</sup> and prepared himself for a siege. And Antiochus sent a part of his army to Bethsura to assault it, while he himself with the rest of his force came to Jerusalem. Now the inhabitants of Bethsura, being overawed by his strength, and seeing how scarce their provisions were, surrendered to him, after receiving sworn assurances that they should suffer no harm at the hands of the king.<sup>d</sup> Then Antiochus took the city and did nothing to them beyond expelling them unarmed; and he stationed his own garrison in the city. But the siege of the temple in Jerusalem kept him there a long time, for those within stoutly resisted; and every siege-engine which the king set up against them, they, in turn, countered with another engine. Their supply of food, however, had begun to give out, for the present crop had been consumed, and the ground

had not been tilled that year, but had remained unsown because it was the seventh year,<sup>a</sup> during which our law obliges us to let it lie uncultivated.<sup>b</sup> Many of the besieged, therefore, ran away because of the lack of necessities, so that only a few were left in the temple.

(6) Such were the circumstances of those who were besieged in the temple. But when Lysias, the commander, and the king were informed that Philip was coming against them from Persia to secure the government for himself, they were ready to abandon the siege and set out against Philip; they decided, however, not to reveal their plan to the soldiers and their officers,<sup>c</sup> but, instead, the king ordered Lysias to address him<sup>d</sup> and the officers publicly and say nothing of the trouble with Philip, but merely show that the siege would take a very long time, and the place was very strong, and explain that their supply of food had

Oct. 135 B.C., the sabbatical years being the following: (1) Oct. 163 to Oct. 162 B.C. (2) Oct. 156 to Oct. 155 B.C. (3) Oct. 149 to Oct. 148 B.C. (4) Oct. 142 to Oct. 141 B.C. (5) Oct. 135 to Oct. 134 B.C. This reckoning seems however to be contradicted by the statement in Ant. xiv. 475 that Herod and Sossius captured Jerusalem during a sabbatical year, since that event occurred in the summer of 37 B.C., and thus the sabbatical year began in Oct. 38 B.C., which does not fit in with the table given above. But Josephus may have been inexact in language there, cf. note ad loc.

<sup>c</sup> Our text of 1 Macc. vi. 57 states that Lysias addressed the king, the officers and the men at the same time, εἶπεν πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα καὶ τοὺς ἡγεμόνας τῆς δυνάμεως καὶ τοὺς ἀνδρας, but it is quite possible that Josephus' text of 1 Macc. read differently (some mss. and the Syriac version have "the nobles" for "the men"). It is likely, moreover, that Josephus infers secrecy on the king's part from the fact that Lysias does not mention Philip in his speech.

Lysias spoke in this manner, and both the army and their officers <sup>a</sup> were pleased with his advice.

(7) And so the king sent to Judas and those who were being besieged with him, and offered to make peace with them and allow them to live in accordance with their fathers' laws. Thereupon the Jews gladly accepted his proposals, and after receiving sworn assurances of his good faith, went out from the temple. But when Antiochus entered it and saw how strong the place was, he violated his oaths, and ordered his force to go round <sup>b</sup> and pull down the wall to the ground.<sup>c</sup> After doing this, he returned to Antioch,<sup>d</sup> taking with him the high priest Onias, who was also called Menelaus.<sup>e</sup> For Lysias had advised the king to slay Menelaus, if he wished the Jews to remain quiet and not give him any trouble ; it was this man, he said, who had been the cause of the mischief by persuading the king's father to compel the Jews to abandon their fathers' religion. Accordingly, the king sent Menelaus to Beroea in Syria, and there had him put to death <sup>a</sup>; he had served as high priest for ten years, <sup>b</sup> and had been a wicked and impious man, who in order to have sole authority for himself had compelled his nation to violate their own laws. The high priest chosen after the death of Menelaus was Alcimus, <sup>c</sup> also called Jakeimos. <sup>d</sup> Now when King Antiochus found <sup>e</sup> that Philip had already seized control of the government, he made war on him, and after getting him into his power, killed him. Then Onias, <sup>f</sup> the son of the high priest, <sup>g</sup> who, as we said before, <sup>h</sup> had been left a mere child when his father died, seeing that the king had slain his uncle Menelaus and had given the high priesthood to Alcimus, although he was not of the family of high priests, <sup>i</sup> because he had been persuaded by Lysias to transfer the office from this house to another, fled to Ptolemy, the king of Egypt. <sup>g</sup> Onias III. According to B.J. vii. 423 it was an Onias, son of Simon, who fled to Ptolemy — this would be Onias III and not Onias IV, as here and in Ant. xiii. 62 ff. The Onias who was slain at Daphne near Antioch by Andronicus, the minister of Antiochus Epiphanes, at the instigation of Menelaus, according to 2 Macc. iv. 32 ff., was Onias III, and not Onias IV : his martyrdom is probably alluded to in Dan. ix. 26, "the anointed one" (A.V. "Messiah"), meaning the anointed high priest.

<sup>c</sup> Gr. Alkimos. According to 1 Macc. vii. 5 ff. it was King Demetrius (cf. below) who appointed Alcimus high priest. 2 Macc. is inconsistent on this point: in xiv. 3 it states that Alcimus had been high priest before Demetrius became king, while in xiv. 13 it says that Demetrius ordered his general to "appoint" Alcimus high priest; possibly, however, the latter expression (καταστήσαι) may here mean "to reinstate." In any case Alcimus probably succeeded Menelaus toward the end of 162 B.C.

<sup>c</sup> Demetrius I Soter, the son of Seleucus IV Philopator and the nephew of Antiochus Epiphanes, had been a hostage in 202

by him and his wife Cleopatra, he received a place in the nome of Heliopolis, where he built a temple similar to that in Jerusalem. Of this, however, we shall give an account on a more fitting occasion.<sup>a</sup>

(x. 1) About the same time <sup>b</sup> Demetrius, the son of Seleucus,<sup>c</sup> escaped from Rome, and occupying Tripolis in Syria,<sup>d</sup> placed the diadem on his own head: then he gathered round him a number of mercenaries, and entered the kingdom, where all the people received him gladly and submitted to him. They also seized King Antiochus and Lysias, and brought them to him alive. And by order of Demetrius these two were immediately put to death,<sup>e</sup> Antiochus having reigned two years,<sup>f</sup> as has already been related elsewhere.<sup>g</sup> Then there came to him in a body many of the wicked and renegade Jews, among whom was the high priest Alcimus, and they accused their whole nation, especially Judas and his brothers, saying that they had killed all the king's friends, and had destroyed all those in the kingdom who were of his party and awaited his coming, and had driven the present speakers out of their country and made them aliens in Rome during the latter's reign. The story of his escape, when refused permission to return to Syria by the Roman Senate, is vividly narrated by his friend and counsellor, the historian Polybius, xxxi. 11 (19) ff.

a strange land : and now they requested him to send one of his own friends and learn from him what bold crimes had been committed by Judas and his men.

(2) And so Demetrius, being roused to anger, sent out Bacchides, a friend of King Antiochus Epiphanes,<sup>a</sup> and a worthy man,<sup>b</sup> who had been entrusted with the government of all Mesopotamia,<sup>c</sup> and giving him a force of soldiers, and putting Alcimus under his protection, instructed him to kill Judas and the men with him. Thereupon Bacchides set out with his force from Antioch, and when he came to Judaea, sent to Judas and his brothers to discuss friendship and peace, for he planned to take him by deceit. But Judas did not trust him, for he saw that he had come with such an army as one has when going to war, but not when making peace. Some of the citizens,<sup>d</sup> however, giving ear to the peace proposals made by Bacchides, and believing that they would suffer no harm at the hands of Alcimus, who was their countryman,<sup>e</sup> went over to them, and after receiving oaths from both men that neither they themselves nor those who were of their mind should suffer in any way, put themselves in their hands. But Bacchides made light of his oaths, and killed sixty of them : and so, by not keeping faith with the first, deterred the others who were thinking of going over to him from doing so. And <sup>c</sup> Josephus misunderstands the phrase in 1 Macc., κυρεύοντα ἐν τῷ πέραν τοῦ ποταμοῦ, which means that he was governor of the country west of the Euphrates, whether North Syria (so Meyer, Ursprung ii. 242 note 4) or Coele-Syria (so Wellhausen cited by Meyer, cf. Ant. xi. 25 note a), and not Mesopotamia.

<sup>a</sup> Variant Bethzetho; most mss. of 1 Macc. have Βηζέθ, but Luc. Βαιθζαρά. This Bezeth or Bethzetho is probably not the well-known Bezetha, the northern quarter of Jerusalem, since the text of 1 Macc. implies that Bacchides marched some distance from the city, but, as Père Abel suggests, mod. Beit Zeit, c. 3 miles N. of Bethsur. 1 Macc. speaks of Bacchides' victims being slaughtered near a great cistern, the when, after marching out of Jerusalem, he came to a village called Berzetho,<sup>a</sup> he sent his men to seize many of the deserters<sup>b</sup> and some of the people, and after killing all these, commanded all who lived in the country to obey Alcimus; and leaving him with enough of an army to enable him to keep the country under his control, he returned to Antioch<sup>c</sup> to King Demetrius.

(3) But Alcimus, wishing to strengthen his authority, and perceiving that by making the people feel friendly toward him he would govern with greater security, led them on with kind words, and speaking to everyone in a pleasant and gracious manner, very soon indeed acquired a large body of men and a force behind him,<sup>d</sup> who were for the most part from the irreligious and renegades, and these he used as his attendants and soldiers in going through the country; and all those whom he found in it siding with Judas he slew. When Judas, therefore, saw that Alcimus had now become powerful and had put to death many of the good and pious men of the nation, he also went through the country, and put to death those who sided with the enemy. <sup>a</sup> 1 Macc. vii. 19 "those of the deserters who were with him," which may mean either the Jews who had deserted to the Syrians (cf. vs. 24 = § 400) and whom he was now punishing for their earlier disobedience, or the Jews who had first sided with the Syrians, but later went over to Judas.

not able to withstand Judas, but was inferior to him in strength, he decided to turn for help to his ally King Demetrius. Accordingly, he went to Antioch and roused the king's anger against Judas, at whose hands he said in his accusation, he had suffered many injuries, which would become still greater unless Judas were first caught and brought to punishment by having a strong force sent against him.<sup>a</sup>

(4) Thereupon Demetrius, beginning to believe that it would be hazardous to his own interests also to do nothing about Judas' growing strength, sent out Nicanor, the most devoted and faithful of his Friends<sup>b</sup>—for it was he who had escaped with him from the city of Rome,<sup>c</sup>—and giving him as large a force as he thought would be sufficient for him to use against Judas, ordered him to deal unsparingly with the nation. But when Nicanor came to Jerusalem, he decided not to fight Judas immediately, but chose to get him into his power by deceit, and so he sent him offers of peace, saying that there was no necessity for their making war and facing danger, but he would give Judas his oath that he should suffer no harm; for, he said, he had come with some friends to make clear to them what the intentions of King Demetrius were, and how he felt toward their race.<sup>a</sup> This offer, which was made by the envoys of Nicanor, was believed by Judas and his brothers, and not suspecting any treachery, they gave pledges to him, and received Nicanor with his force. But he, after greeting Judas, and while conversing with him, gave his men a certain signal by which they were to seize Judas. He, however, saw through the plot, and dashing out, escaped to his own men.<sup>b</sup> Accordingly, since his purpose and the trap had become known, Nicanor decided to make war on Judas; but the other, having organized his men and prepared for battle, engaged him at a certain village called Kapharsalama,<sup>c</sup> and defeated him and forced him to flee to the Akra in Jerusalem.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>c</sup> Neither 1 Macc. nor 2 Macc. mentions Nicanor's having been in Rome with Demetrius, which information Josephus must have got from Polybius, cf. Polyb. xxxi. 14 (22). 4. It is doubtful whether he is the same Nicanor whom Lysias sent against Judas in 165 b.c., cf. § 298 note b. Bevan, II. Sel. ii. 200 note 5, writes, "One suspects that Josephus had nothing to go upon, except that he knew from Polybius that a Nicanor had been on that occasion with Demetrius."

<sup>a</sup> 1 Macc. does not say that Nicanor spoke of Demetrius' attitude toward the Jews. Is there, perhaps, some connexion between this statement in Josephus and that of 2 Macc. xiv. 5, that Demetrius inquired of Alcimus how the Jews were disposed toward him?

<sup>d</sup> The text of this paragraph has been emended in two places by Dindorf; according to the ms. reading it was Nicanor who defeated Judas and forced him to flee to the Akra. It seems necessary to accept Dindorf's emendations for two reasons, first because 1 Macc. says plainly that Nicanor, having lost 500 men, fled to Jerusalem ("the city of David"), and second because the Akra was in the hands of the Syrians, and it must therefore have been Nicanor, and not Judas, who fled there. Schürer, however, i. 217 note 26, insists that Nicanor could not have suffered a "real defeat" since, according to 1 Macc., he lost only 500 men (a v.l. gives 5000).

After making these threats, he left Jerusalem, while the priests burst into tears in their distress over his words, and supplicated God to deliver them from their enemies. Now after Nicanor had left Jerusalem, he came to a certain village called Bethoron,<sup>b</sup> and there encamped, being joined by another force from Syria. And Judas encamped at Adasa,<sup>c</sup> another village thirty stades <sup>c</sup> distant from Bethoron, with two thousand men in all.<sup>d</sup> These he exhorted not to be overawed by the numbers of their adversaries nor to reflect how many they were about to contend against, but to bear in mind who they were and for what prize they were facing danger, and bravely encounter the enemy; and then he led them out to battle. And engaging Nicanor, he defeated his adversaries after a severe fight, and killed many of them: and finally <sup>e</sup> Nicanor himself fell, fighting gloriously. site is really 60 stades (c. 7 miles) from Beit-ʿŪr el-Fōqā (Bethoron), and not merely 30 stades as Josephus states (no distance is given in 1 Macc.). Other scholars, including Schürer, identify Adasa with mod. ʿAdasch N.E. of Bethoron in the vicinity of Jifnā (Gophna), on the basis of B.J. i. 45 ff. where the account of Judas' retreat to Gophna after the battle of Bethzacharias (cf. §§ 369 ff.) is followed by that of his death (!) at Acedasa (= Adasa?), but the passage in B.J. is entirely unreliable. We must, it seems, suppose, with Père Abel, that Josephus errs here in giving the distance between Adasa and Bethoron as 30 stades.

<sup>a</sup> This statement, repeated in §§ 419 and 434, has no basis in 1 Macc. ; it is, moreover, contradicted by Josephus himself, who says, Ant. xx. 237, that after the death of Alcimus there was no high priest in Jerusalem for seven years (i.e. until Jonathan became high priest). According to early rabbinic tradition, cf. Derenbourg, p. 58, Mattathias and his sons were all high priests. the people gave the high priesthood to Judas<sup>a</sup>; thereupon,<sup>b</sup> having heard of the power of the Romans and that they had subdued Galatia<sup>c</sup> and Iberia<sup>d</sup> and Carthage in Libya,<sup>e</sup> and in addition had conquered Greece<sup>f</sup> and the kings Perseus,<sup>g</sup> Philip<sup>h</sup> and Antiochus the Great,<sup>i</sup> he decided to make a treaty of friendship with them.<sup>j</sup> Accordingly, he sent to Rome his friends Eupolemus, the son of Joannes, and Jason, the son of Eleazar, and through them requested the Romans to become his allies and friends, and to write to Demetrius that he should not make war on the Jews. When the envoys sent by Judas came to Rome, the Senate received them, and after they<sup>k</sup> had spoken about their mission, agreed to the alliance. It also made a decree concerning this, and sent a copy to Judaea, while the original was engraved on bronze tablets and deposited in the Capitol.<sup>l</sup> It read as

<sup>i</sup> Antiochus III, having been defeated in several battles by the Romans, the last at Magnesia in 189 B.C., was forced to pay a large indemnity and annual tribute to Rome. Josephus omits further details about the Romans given in 1 Macc. viii. 6-16.

follows. "A decree of the Senate concerning a treaty of alliance and goodwill <sup>a</sup> with the Jewish nation. No one of those who are subject to the Romans shall make war on the Jewish nation, or furnish to those who make war on them any grain, ships or money.<sup>b</sup> And if any attack the Jews, the Romans shall assist them so far as they are able, and on the other hand, if any attack the Romans, the Jews shall help them as allies.<sup>c</sup> And if the Jewish nation <sup>d</sup> wishes either to add anything to, or remove anything from, this treaty of alliance, this shall be done with the concurrence of the Roman people,<sup>e</sup> and whatever may be added shall be valid."<sup>f</sup> The decree was signed <sup>g</sup> by Eupolemus, the son of Joannes, and by Jason, the son of Eleazar, Judas being high priest of the nation, and his brother Simon commander.<sup>h</sup> This, then, is how the first treaty of friendship and alliance between the Romans and the Jews came about.

<sup>a</sup> 1 Mace. "And they took the road to Galgala (cf. "Galaad") and encamped against Maisaloth in Arbela." Josephus thus omits Maisaloth, and apparently equates Galilee with Judaea, probably using "Judaea" in the broader sense of "Jewish territory," as in B.J. i. 309. Père Abel follows Josephus in reading Galilee for Galgala or Galaad, and with Robinson explains Maisaloth, not as a proper name, but as the transliteration of Heb. m'sillôth, here meaning "ascent" (in the LXX of 2 Chron. ix. 11 ἀραβάσεις renders m'sillôth). This Arbela in Galilee would then be the same as that mentioned in Vita 188, 311 et al. as a region of caves, as Josephus describes it here, and is therefore to be identified with mod. Irbid, a few miles W. of the Sea of Galilee, a little S.W. of Magdala and N.W. of Tiberias.

Judaea and encamped at Arbela, a city in Galilee <sup>a</sup>; and after besieging those who were in the caves there <sup>b</sup>—for many had taken refuge in these,—he captured them, and departing from there, hastened toward Jerusalem.<sup>c</sup> But when he learned that Judas had encamped at a certain village by the name of Berzetho,<sup>d</sup> he pushed on to meet him with twenty thousand foot-soldiers and two thousand horsemen; while Judas' whole force amounted to only a thousand.<sup>e</sup> When these saw the great numbers of Bacchides' men, they became afraid,<sup>f</sup> and abandoning their lines, all but eight hundred fled. But Judas, although abandoned by his own soldiers, and with the enemy pressing him and allowing him no time to rally his force, was ready to engage Bacchides' men with his eight hundred; and so he exhorted these few <sup>g</sup> to

<sup>e</sup> Variant 2000; 1 Macc. "3000 picked men." Judas must have had much more than a 1000 men, if, after most of them had fled (cf. below), there were still 800 left.

They, however, said that they were not sufficiently strong to fight so great an army, and advised him to retreat for the time being, and so save them, but, when he had assembled his men,<sup>a</sup> to engage the foe then. "May the sun not look upon such a thing,"<sup>b</sup> he replied, "as that I should show my back to the enemy. <sup>a</sup> Variants Mount Eza, Gazara; 1 Mace. ἕως Ἀζώτου ὄρους "as far as Mount Azotus" — this cannot, of course, be the city of Azotus (bibl. Ashdod) in the Philistine plain. Michaelis (ap. Grimm) long ago ingeniously suggested that Azotus (= Ashdod) in 1 Mace. is a misunderstanding of Heb. 'ašdōth hā-hār "the slopes of the mountain (hill)," while that Bacchides and the strongest part of his army were on the right wing, took his bravest men and made for that part of the line, and falling upon the troops there, broke their solid ranks. Then thrusting himself through their midst, he forced them to flee, and pursued them as far as Mount Aza,<sup>a</sup> as it is called. But when those of the left observed the rout of their right wing, they encircled Judas as he was pursuing it,<sup>b</sup> and coming up behind him, caught him in their midst. And so, being unable to flee, and surrounded by the enemy, he stood there with his followers and fought. But after killing many of his adversaries, he became worn out, and himself fell; and so, still performing glorious deeds as he was dying, like those which he had performed in the past, he breathed his last. When Judas fell, his followers, having no one to look to thereafter, and being deprived of so great a commander, fled forthwith.<sup>c</sup> But Simon and Jonathan, the brothers of Judas, obtained his dead body from the enemy under a truce, and carrying it to the village of Modëein,<sup>d</sup> where their father also had been buried, performed the last rites; and the people mourned him for many days, and publicly honoured him with the customary ceremonies. Torrey, JBL liii., 1934, p. 32, less plausibly supposes that the original Greek of 1 Macc. was ἔως ἀνω τοῦ ὄρους rendering Heb. 'ad ma'alēh hā-hār "up to the slope of the hill." Both these attempts to eliminate the proper name seem less convincing than the proposal of Père Abel to explain ΑΖΑΟΡΟΥΣ in Josephus as an haplography of ΑΖΩΠΟΥ ΟΡΟΥΣ, and to identify this Azorus with mod. el-'Aṣūr, a hilly site c. 6 miles N.E. of el-Bîreh (Berzetho).

BOOK XIII

(i. 1) In what manner the Jewish nation regained its liberty after the Macedonians had subjugated it, and how many and how severe were the struggles through which their commander Judas went before he died fighting on their behalf, we have related in the preceding book. Now after the death of Judas<sup>a</sup> all those who remained of the godless, and the transgressors against their country's manner of life once more rose up among the Jews, and flourishing on all sides, did them injury. And their wickedness was accompanied by a famine which seized upon the country, so that through the lack of necessities and their inability to hold out against the afflictions caused both by the famine and by their foes, many deserted to the Macedonians. Then Bacchides gathered together those of the Jews who had given up the customs of their country and had chosen the kind of life common to other nations, and entrusted to them the government of the country; and these men seized the friends of Judas and those who sympathized with him, and delivered them to Bacchides, whereupon he first tortured and maltreated them at his pleasure, and then made an end of them in this way. After this calamity had befallen the Jews, which was greater than any they had experienced since their return from Babylon,<sup>a</sup> those of Judas' companions who survived, seeing their nation perish so miserably, went to his brother Jonathan and begged him to imitate his brother, who in his concern for his countrymen had died on behalf of the liberty of them all, and not suffer the nation to be without a defender or be destroyed by its present afflictions. Thereupon Jonathan said that he was ready to die for them, and so, being considered in no way inferior to his brother, he was appointed commander of the Jews.<sup>b</sup>

(2) But Bacchides heard of this, and fearing that Jonathan might cause trouble to the king and the Macedonians, as Judas had done before him, he sought to kill him by treachery.<sup>c</sup> That this was his intention, however, was not unknown to Jonathan and his brother Simon, and when they learned of it, they took all their companions and fled in haste to the wilderness which was nearest to the city,<sup>d</sup> and on coming to the body of water called the Pool of Asphar,<sup>e</sup> remained there. But when Bacchides became aware that they had removed and were now in that place, he set out against them with his entire force and encamped across the Jordan and there rested his force.<sup>a</sup> Thereupon Jonathan, learning that Bacchides had come against him, sent his brother John, also called Gaddis,<sup>b</sup> to the Nabataean Arabs<sup>c</sup> to leave his equipment with them until they should fight against Bacchides, for they were friends of the Jews. But as John was on his way to the Nabataeans, the sons of Amaraïos<sup>d</sup> lay in ambush for him outside the city of Medaba,<sup>e</sup> and seized both him and his men, and after plundering all that they were carrying, killed John and all his companions. Nevertheless they suffered fitting punishment for this at the hands of his brothers, as we shall presently relate.<sup>f</sup>

(3) Now when Bacchides learned that Jonathan had encamped in the marshes of the Jordan,<sup>g</sup> he waited for the day of the Sabbath and then came against him, thinking that he would not fight on that day because of the Law. But Jonathan exhorted his companions, telling them that their lives were in danger, since they were hemmed in between the

He had felled many of them when he saw Bacchides boldly advancing on him, and so he stretched out his right hand to strike him. But Bacchides saw the blow coming and evaded it, whereupon Jonathan leaped into the river with his companions and swam across, and in this manner they escaped to the other side of the Jordan, for the enemy no longer followed them across the river; and Bacchides straightway returned to the citadel in Jerusalem, having lost about two thousand<sup>b</sup> of his army. Judaea as hostages and shut them up in the citadel and in this manner kept them under guard.

(4) About this time<sup>a</sup> someone came to Jonathan and his brother Simon with the report that the sons of Amaraïos were celebrating a wedding and bringing the bride, who was the daughter of one of the distinguished men among the Arabs,<sup>b</sup> from the city of Nabatha,<sup>c</sup> and that the procession accompanying the girl would be a splendid and costly one. Thereupon Jonathan and Simon, thinking that a most favourable opportunity had arisen for avenging their brother, and believing that they could exact satisfaction from them with the greatest ease for the killing of John, set out for Medaba and lay in wait for their foes in the mountains. And when they saw them conducting the maid and her bridegroom and a great company of friends, as is usual at a wedding, they sprang out from their ambush and killed them all, and after taking as spoil the ornaments and the rest of the possessions that were then being taken along by these people, turned back. Such, then, was the punishment which they inflicted on the sons of Amaraïos for killing their brother John, for these men themselves and the friends who accompanied them, and their wives and children, perished to the number of about four hundred.<sup>d</sup>

(5) And so Simon and Jonathan returned to the marshes of the river and remained there, while Bacchides, after securing all Judaea with garrisons, Nabadath, Gabadan. Abel, GP, carte viii, locates it 2 miles S.W. of Medeba. Klein, EY 66, corrects the name to Nabhatta, near Caesarea on the coast; with this the reading "of Canaan" seems to him to agree better than with a site in Transjordan.

<sup>a</sup> At this point (ix. 54) 1 Macc. relates the death of the high priest Alcimus in the 153rd yr. Sel.=160-59 B.C.; this has already been mentioned by Josephus in Ant. xii. 413.

returned to the king.<sup>a</sup> And thereafter the affairs of the Jews were peaceful for two years.<sup>b</sup> But the renegades<sup>c</sup> and godless men, seeing that Jonathan and his followers were living in the country in the greatest security because of the peace, sent to King Demetrius and urged him to send Bacchides to seize Jonathan, for this, they informed him, could be done without difficulty, and if his men fell upon them unexpectedly in one night they could kill them all. The king therefore sent Bacchides, and when he came to Judaea, he wrote to his friends, both Jews and allies, to seize Jonathan for him. And they all made an effort to do so, but were not able to get hold of Jonathan—for he had become aware of the plot and guarded himself closely—<sup>d</sup>, whereupon Bacchides, being enraged at the renegades for having, as he thought, deceived him and the king, seized fifty of their leaders and killed them.<sup>e</sup> But Jonathan, in fear of Bacchides, withdrew with his brother and his companions to Bethalaga,<sup>f</sup> a village in the wilderness, and building towers and surrounding it with walls, kept himself safely protected. When Bacchides heard of this, he led out the army that was with him, and killed them.” Most commentators take this to mean that Jonathan killed fifty of the Jews who called Bacchides to Judaea. Perhaps Josephus takes Bacchides to be the subject here because of vs. 69 (see below, § 31), which says that Bacchides, angry at the siege he was forced to undergo by Jonathan and Simon, killed many of the Jews who had invited him to attack the Hasmonaean forces.

<sup>f</sup> Bethbasi in 1 Macc. Oesterley, CLP, suggested a connexion with the Wady el-Bassah, E. of Tekoah, and recently Père Abel has identified it more exactly with Khirbet Beit-Bassa, c. 3 miles N. by E. of Tekoah. Klein, EY, p. 56, suggests that the original name was Beth Nibshan, found in Josh. xv. 62. But the form Bethalaga in Josephus still remains a puzzle.

and taking along his Jewish allies, came against Jonathan and assaulted his fortifications and besieged him for many days. Jonathan, however, did not yield before the severity of the siege, but after holding out stoutly, left his brother Simon in the city to carry on the fight with Bacchides, and himself secretly went out into the country; then having gathered together a large force from among those who sympathized with him,<sup>a</sup> he fell upon Bacchides' camp by night and slew a good many of them, thus making known to his brother Simon that he had fallen upon the foe. When Simon became aware that the enemy were being killed by him, he too sallied out against them and burned the engines which the Macedonians had used in the siege, and caused the slaughter of a considerable number of their men. But Bacchides, seeing himself hemmed in by his foes, some of them pressing him in front and others from behind, fell into a despondent and disturbed state of mind, for he was confounded at the unexpected outcome of the siege. However he vented his anger at these reverses on the renegades who had sent for him to the king, for he believed they had deceived him.<sup>b</sup> And he wished to end the siege and, if possible, return home without dishonour.<sup>c</sup>

Jonathan must have ruled in comparative peace for about seven years, from 160 to 153 B.C.

and careless about public affairs, for which reason the hatred of his subjects was still more inflamed against him, as we have already related elsewhere.<sup>a</sup> But when Demetrius heard that Alexander had come to Ptolemais, he took his entire army and led it against him. He also sent envoys to Jonathan to propose a friendly alliance, for he had determined to anticipate Alexander lest he should be before him in treating with Jonathan and obtaining assistance from him. This he did from fear that Jonathan might bear him a grudge for his former enmity, and therefore join in the attack on him. Accordingly he instructed him to collect a force and provide arms, and to recover the Jewish hostages whom Bacchides had shut up in the citadel of Jerusalem. On receiving this message from Demetrius, Jonathan came to Jerusalem and read the king's letter in the hearing of the people and of those who guarded the citadel. And when these instructions were read, the godless men and the renegades of the citadel were in great fear, now that the king had permitted Jonathan to raise an army and recover the hostages. But he restored every one of them to his parents. So Jonathan took up his residence<sup>b</sup> in Jerusalem, making various repairs in the city and arranging everything according to his own liking. Thus he ordered the walls of the city<sup>c</sup> also to be built of square stones in order that they might be more secure against the

(2) But when Alexander learned of the promises which Demetrius had made to Jonathan, knowing of his courage and what great things he had accomplished in the war with the Macedonians, and, on the other hand, how greatly he had suffered at the hands of Demetrius and Demetrius' general Bacchides, he told his Friends<sup>c</sup> that at the present juncture he could find no better ally than Jonathan, who was courageous in battle<sup>d</sup> and also had his own grounds for hating Demetrius, having suffered many injuries at his hands as well as having inflicted them on him. "If, then, we decide to make him our friend against Demetrius, nothing would be of more advantage just now than to invite him to make an alliance with us." Accordingly when it was decided by himself and his Friends to send to Jonathan, he wrote the following letter.<sup>e</sup> "King Alexander to his brother Jonathan, greeting. (3) On receiving this letter, Jonathan, at the time of the festival of Tabernacles, put on the high-priestly robe, this being four years after the death of his brother Judas—for there had been no high priest during this time—<sup>b</sup> and gathered together a large force and forged a great number of arms. But Demetrius was greatly grieved on learning these things, and they caused him to blame himself for his dilatoriness in not anticipating Alexander by himself extending privileges<sup>c</sup> to Jonathan instead of leaving the other this opportunity. Accordingly he also wrote a letter to Jonathan and the people, which read as follows. "King Demetrius to Jonathan<sup>d</sup> and the Jewish nation, greeting. Since you have preserved your friendship for us, and in spite of their tempting offers have not joined yourselves to my foes, I commend you for this loyalty on your part, and exhort you to continue in the same course, for which you shall receive a recompense from us and our favour. Meanwhile King Alexander gathered together a large force of mercenaries and soldiers from Syria who joined him, and marched against Demetrius.<sup>b</sup> And in the battle which took place the left wing of Demetrius put their adversaries to flight, and pursuing them for a great distance, killed a great many of them and plundered their camp; but the right wing, where Demetrius happened to be, was defeated. And though all the others fled, Demetrius fought valiantly and slew not a few of the enemy, but in pursuing the others, he rode his horse into a deep swamp from which it was difficult to get out, and as his horse fell just there, he was unable to escape, and

<sup>a</sup> Polybius and Eusebius give him a reign of 12 years. He began to rule in 162 B.C. (cf. Ant. xii. 389 note b), and his death probably occurred in 150 B.C., cf. Kolbe, p. 56. As both Demetrius and Alexander were usurpers, it is difficult to determine just how long their reigns should be considered to have lasted. Usurpers often issued coins before they were generally recognized as kings.

was slain. For the enemy, seeing what had happened to him, turned round, and encircling Demetrius, all threw their javelins at him. But though he was on foot, he valiantly fought them off, until finally, after receiving many wounds and no longer being able to hold out, he fell. Such was the fate that overtook Demetrius after a reign of eleven years,<sup>a</sup> as we have related elsewhere.<sup>b</sup>

(iii. 1) <sup>c</sup> Now the son of the high priest Onias, who had the same name as his father, having fled to King Ptolemy surnamed Philometor, was living in Alexandria, as we have said before<sup>d</sup>; and seeing that Judaea was being ravaged by the Macedonians and their kings, and desiring to acquire for himself eternal fame and glory, he determined to send to King Ptolemy and Queen Cleopatra and request of them authority to build a temple in Egypt similar to that at Jerusalem, and to appoint Levites and priests of his own race. In this desire he was encouraged chiefly by the words of the prophet Isaiah, who had lived more than six hundred years before and had foretold that a temple to the Most High God was surely to be built in Egypt by a Jew.<sup>e</sup> Being, there-

Many commentators suspect vs. 18-25 of this chapter of having been interpolated by a writer of the Hasmonaean period: in vs. 18 some scholars emend 'ir ha-heres' "city of destruction" to 'ir ha-heres' "city of the sun," supposing this to be an allusion to the name Heliopolis "city of the sun."

<sup>a</sup> Probably not the war between Antiochus Epiphanes and Ptolemy Philometor, but the war between Philometor and his rival Ptolemy VII Euergetes, in which case Onias is to be identified with the Jewish general Onias mentioned in Ap. ii. 49. Büchler conjectures (Tobiaden, pp. 246 ff.) that Onias' contemporary Dosithens, a Samaritan, sought to establish a rival temple in Egypt.

fore, excited by these words, Onias wrote the following letter to Ptolemy and Cleopatra. "Many and great are the services which I have rendered you in the course of the war,<sup>a</sup> with the help of God, when I was in Coele-Syria and Phoenicia, and when I came with the Jews to Leontopolis in the nome of Heliopolis<sup>b</sup> and to other places where our nation is settled; and I found that most of them have temples, contrary to what is proper, and that for this reason they are ill-disposed toward one another, as is also the case with the Egyptians because of the multitude of their temples and their varying opinions about the forms of worship; and I have found a most suitable place in the fortress called after Bubastis-of-the-Fields, which abounds in various kinds of trees and is full of sacred animals, wherefore I beg you to permit me to cleanse this temple, which belongs to no one and is in ruins, and to build a temple<sup>c</sup> to the Most High God in the likeness of that at Jerusalem and with the same dimensions,<sup>d</sup> on behalf of you and your wife and children, in order that the Jewish inhabitants of Egypt may be able to come together there in mutual harmony and serve your interests. For this indeed is what the prophet Isaiah foretold, 'There shall be an altar in Egypt to the distance of 180 stades (c. 20 miles) from Memphis. For the literature on the topography see Schürer iii. 97 n. 25 and Petrie, Hyksos and Israelite Cities, 1906. The temple was probably near the Ἰουδαίων στρατόπεδον "Jews' camp," mentioned in Ant. xiv. 133.

Lord God,' and many other such things did he prophesy concerning this place."

(2) This, then, is what Onias wrote to King Ptolemy. And one may get a notion of the king's piety and that of his sister and wife Cleopatra from the letter which they wrote in reply, for they placed the blame for the sin and transgression against the Law on the head of Onias,<sup>a</sup> writing the following reply. "King Ptolemy and Queen Cleopatra to Onias, greeting. We have read your petition asking that it be permitted you to cleanse the ruined temple in Leontopolis in the nome of Heliopolis, called Bubastis-of-the-Fields. We wonder, therefore, whether it will be pleasing to God that a temple be built in a place so wild<sup>b</sup> and full of sacred<sup>c</sup> animals. But since you say that the prophet Isaiah foretold this long ago, we grant your request if this is to be in accordance with the Law, so that we may not seem to have sinned against God in any way."

Ptolemy Philometor allows Onias to build a temple at Leontopolis.

(3) And so Onias took over the place and built a temple and an altar to God similar to that at Jerusalem, but smaller and poorer. But it has not seemed to me necessary to write about its dimensions and its vessels now, for they have already been described in the seventh book of my Jewish War.<sup>a</sup> And Onias found some Jews of his own kind, and priests and Levites to minister<sup>b</sup> there. Concerning this temple, however, we have already said enough.

The temple of Onias.

<sup>a</sup> From what follows it would seem that the only possible sin consisted in choosing a pagan site for the temple. The problem of the validity of a sacrificial site outside Jerusalem, which most scholars believe to have been implicitly forbidden by the legislation of Deuteronomy, is not raised here. The rabbis, however, seem to have accorded the Onias temple some degree of sanctity, cf. Mishnah, Menahoth, xiii. 10, and the works cited in Appendix K.

(4) Now there arose a quarrel between the Jews in Alexandria and the Samaritans who worshipped at the temple on Mount Gerizim, which had been built in the time of Alexander,<sup>c</sup> and they disputed about their respective temples in the presence of Ptolemy himself, the Jews asserting that it was the temple at Jerusalem which had been built in accordance with the laws of Moses, and the Samaritans that it was the temple on Gerizim.<sup>d</sup> And they requested the king to sit in council with his Friends and hear their arguments on these matters, and to punish with death those who were defeated. Accordingly, Sabbaeus and Theodosius made speeches on behalf of the Samaritans, while Andronicus, the son of Messalamus,<sup>e</sup> spoke for the inhabitants of Jerusalem and Judaea. And they swore by God and the king that they would give their proofs in accordance with the Law, and requested Ptolemy to put to death anyone whom he might find violating these oaths. And so the king brought many of his Friends into his council and sat to hear the speakers. And the Jews who were then in Alexandria were in great anxiety about the men whose task it was to express indignation on behalf<sup>a</sup> of the temple at Jerusalem, for they were resentful that any should seek to destroy this temple which was so ancient and the most celebrated of all those in the world. But as Sabbaeus and Theodosius permitted Andronicus to make the first speech, he began with proofs from the Law and the succession of the high priests, showing how each had become head of the temple by receiving that office from his father, and that all the kings of Asia had honoured the temple with dedicatory-offerings and most splendid gifts, while none had shown any respect or regard for that on Gerizim, as though it were not in existence. By these and many similar arguments Andronicus persuaded the king to decide that the temple at Jerusalem had been built in accordance with the laws of Moses, and to put to death Sabbaeus and Theodosius and their party. These, then, were the things that befell the Jews in Alexandria in the reign of Ptolemy Philometor.

(iv. 1)<sup>b</sup> Now after Demetrius had died in battle, as we have related above,<sup>c</sup> Alexander<sup>d</sup> took over the royal power in Syria, and wrote to Ptolemy Philometor to ask for the hand of his daughter in marriage; for, he said, it was right that Ptolemy should form a connexion with one who had recovered his father's throne and had been restored to it by the providence of God, and had conquered Demetrius, and on other grounds as well would be not unworthy of such an alliance with him. And Ptolemy, who gladly accepted his suit, wrote a reply, saying that he rejoiced at Alexander's recovery of his father's throne ; and he promised to give him his daughter, and told him to meet him at Ptolemais where he would bring his daughter, for, he said, he would himself escort her from Egypt as far as that city, and there he would give him his child in marriage. <sup>a</sup> 1 Macc. x. 65, “ inscribed him as one of his First Friends, and made him general and meridarch ”—that is, military and civil governor of Judaea, although the Syrian garrison remained in the citadel of Jerusalem, cf. below § 121.

<sup>b</sup> The 165th yr. Sel. extended from Oct. 148 to Oct. 147 B.C., or, by Jewish reckoning, from April 147 to April 146 B.C.

<sup>c</sup> Bevan, II. Sel. ii. 301, suggests emending “ Cilicia ” to “ Seleucia ” (in Pieria, not far from Antioch). 1 Macc. x. 67 has, “ to the land of his fathers,” presumably meaning Syria. According to Justinus xxxv. 2-1 Demetrius II had been living in Jonathan shown by King Alexander that he even inscribed him as his First Friend.<sup>a</sup>

(3) But in the hundred and sixty-fifth year <sup>b</sup> Demetrius, the son of Demetrius, embarked from Crete with many mercenaries, with whom Lasthenes the Cretan had furnished him, and sailed to Cilicia.<sup>c</sup> When Alexander heard of this, he was thrown into a state of anxiety and confusion, and at once hastened from Phoenicia to Antioch in order to make his position there secure before Demetrius should arrive. He also left as governor of Coele-Syria Apollonius <sup>d</sup> Taos,<sup>e</sup> who came to Jamneia with a great force and sent to the high priest Jonathan, saying it was unjust that he alone should live in security and with freedom to do as he liked, not being subject to the king; it was, he said, bringing on him the reproach of all men that he did not make himself subject to the king.<sup>f</sup> "Do not, therefore, deceive yourself," he added, "sitting in the mountains and thinking that you are strong; but if you have confidence in your force, come down to the plain and measure your force at Cnidus (in Caria), in relation to which Cilicia, on the border of Syria, might be considered part of the "land of his fathers," and so interpreted by Josephus, even if he had no Hellenistic source. Moreover Demetrius fell back on Cilicia later, as Josephus tells us in § 145: it may therefore be assumed that he had originally set out from there as from his base of operations.

against my army, and the final victory will show which is the braver of the two. You should know, however, that the best men of each city are in my army, and these are the very men who have always been victorious over your ancestors. And you shall have a contest with us on ground where one cannot fight with stones, but with arms, and where there is no place to which you can flee when defeated."

(4) Greatly angered by these words, Jonathan collected ten thousand picked soldiers and set out from Jerusalem with his brother Simon, and coming to Joppa, encamped outside the city, for the inhabitants closed their gates against him, having had a garrison stationed within the city by Apollonius. But as Jonathan was preparing to besiege them,<sup>a</sup> they were afraid that he might take their city by storm, and so they opened the gates to him. And when Apollonius heard that Joppa had been occupied by Jonathan, he took three thousand horsemen and eight thousand foot-soldiers<sup>b</sup> and came to Azotus,<sup>c</sup> and departing from there, made an easy and slow march until he came to Joppa; here he retired and drew Jonathan into the plain, for he had sublime confidence<sup>d</sup> in his horsemen, and placed his hopes of victory in them. Thereupon Jonathan advanced and pursued Apollonius to Azotus, and the latter, when once the enemy was in the plain, turned back and engaged him in battle. Now Apollonius had placed a thousand horsemen in ambush in a valley <sup>a</sup> to surprise the enemy in the rear, but Jonathan became aware of this and was not dismayed; he drew up his army in a square <sup>b</sup> and prepared <sup>c</sup> to fight the enemy on either line by opposing them whether they attacked his front or his rear. And as the battle continued until the evening, he gave his brother Simon part of his force and commanded them to engage the main body of the foe, while he ordered his own men to make a fence of their shields, and so receive the javelins thrown by the horsemen. Accordingly, they did as they were commanded, while the enemy's horsemen hurled javelins at them until they had no more left, without injuring them at all, for the missiles did not reach their bodies, but glanced off the shields that were joined in a fence and compactly united, and so they were easily turned aside and fell back harmless.<sup>d</sup> And as the enemy were fatigued from throwing javelins at them from early morning until late evening, Simon, who perceived that they were weary, engaged their main body, and through the great ardour which his soldiers showed put the foe to flight. And when their horsemen saw the foot-soldiers fleeing, they no longer stayed, but being fatigued from fighting until evening, and having lost hope of aid from the foot-soldiers, they too fled in disorder and confusion, with the result that their lines were broken and they were scattered all over the plain. And Jonathan pursued them as far as Azotus, slaying many of them, and forced those who despaired of being saved to take refuge in the temple of Dagon<sup>a</sup> which was in Azotus. But Jonathan took the city by a sudden attack, and burnt it and the surrounding villages as well. Nor did he spare the temple of Dagon, but burnt this too and slew those who had taken refuge in it. And the total number of the enemy who fell in battle and were burnt to death in the temple was eight thousand. Then, having conquered so great a force, he marched off from Azotus and came to Ascalon; and as he was encamped outside the city, the inhabitants of Ascalon came out to meet him, bringing him presents to show he was welcome, and honouring him. He therefore expressed approval of their friendly intention,<sup>b</sup> and returned from there to Jerusalem, taking along much booty which he had seized in the victory over his enemies. Now when Alexander heard that his general Apollonius had been defeated, he pretended to be pleased, as if it had been against his will that Apollonius<sup>c</sup> fought with Jonathan who was his friend and ally, and he wrote to Jonathan, testifying to his worth by giving him rewards and honours, including a gold brooch,<sup>a</sup> such as are customarily given to kinsmen of kings,<sup>b</sup> and he turned over to him Akkaron<sup>c</sup> and its district as land for settlement.

<sup>d</sup> In contrast to Josephus and Diodorus xxxii. 9, 1 Macc. xi. 1 says that Ptolemy came to Syria with treachery toward Alexander. Whatever his original intentions may have

(5) It was also at about this time that King Ptolemy, surnamed Philometor, came to Syria with a force of ships and foot-soldiers to fight as an ally of Alexander, who was his son-in-law.<sup>d</sup> And all the cities, at Alexander's command, gladly welcomed him, and escorted him as far as the city of Azotus, where all the inhabitants clamorously demanded satisfaction from him for the burning of their temple of Dagon, and accused Jonathan of destroying it and wasting their territory with fire and killing many of their men. And while Ptolemy heard these complaints in silence, Jonathan went to meet him at Joppa, and received from him splendid gifts and all kinds of honours; he then escorted him as far as the river called Eleutherus,<sup>e</sup> and again returned to Jerusalem.

<sup>a</sup> This incident appears to be referred to in 1 Macc. xi. 10, in which Ptolemy says, "I regret having given him (Alexander) my daughter, for he has sought to kill me." Ammonius is not mentioned in Diodorus xxxii. 9 c.

<sup>b</sup> There is no such passage in Josephus; he has taken over the formula from his source. The story of Ammonius being disguised as a woman has a curious parallel in Diodorus's account, xxxii. 10, of Herais, the daughter of Diophantus, who lived in Arabia, whither Alexander fled a plot was formed against him by Alexander through Ammonius, who happened to be his friend. And when the plot was discovered, Ptolemy wrote to Alexander and demanded that Ammonius be given up to him for punishment, saying that a plot had been formed against him by Ammonius, for which he expected him to pay the penalty.<sup>a</sup> But when Alexander refused to give him up, he understood that it was Alexander who had plotted against him, and so he felt very bitter toward him. Now Alexander had earlier offended the Antiochians because of Ammonius, for they had suffered many evils at his hands. Nevertheless Ammonius met with punishment for his reckless crimes, being cut down shamefully as a woman, for he had made an effort to conceal himself in a woman's dress, as we have related elsewhere.<sup>b</sup>

(7) <sup>c</sup> Ptolemy, however, who blamed himself for having given his daughter in marriage to Alexander, and for making an alliance with him against Demetrius, dissolved the connexion with him; and having taken his daughter from him, he promptly sent to Demetrius, proposing a friendly alliance, and promising to give him his daughter to wife, and to restore to him his father's throne. (see below § 117). Herais, having suffered a mysterious change of sex, adopted male attire, and as a mounted soldier, accompanied Alexander on his flight.

<sup>c</sup> The following section, to § 121, is based chiefly on a Hellenistic source, though there are some verbal parallels to 1 Macc. xi. 10-20. Here again Nicolas of Damascus appears to be the immediate source, partly because of such words and phrases as ἀποβύματα in § 111 and ἡδίστον ἀκούσμα καὶ θέλημα in § 118 (cf. Ant. v. 125, going back to Xenophon, Mem. ii. 1. 31).

metrius, being pleased with the offer made through his envoys, accepted the alliance and the marriage. But one difficult task still remained for Ptolemy, which was to persuade the Antiochians to accept Demetrius, toward whom they felt hostility because of the lawless acts committed against them by his father Demetrius. But he accomplished this also, for the Antiochians hated Alexander on account of Ammonius, as we have related,<sup>a</sup> and were ready to drive him out of Antioch. And so, being expelled from Antioch, he came to Cilicia. And Ptolemy, on coming to the Antiochians, was proclaimed king by them and their armies, and was compelled to put on two diadems, one being that of Asia, and the other that of Egypt. However, being a good and upright person by nature, and not being ambitious of dazzling fortune,<sup>b</sup> and, in addition, being skilled in reading the future, he determined to refrain from appearing to give the Romans any reason for disliking him: and bringing together the Antiochians in assembly, he sought to persuade them to accept Demetrius, saying that if Demetrius were well received by them, he would not bear them any grudge on account of his father, and he agreed to be a counsellor of good and a guide to Demetrius, and promised that if Demetrius attempted any unworthy acts, he would not permit him to carry them out. For himself, he asserted, the throne of Egypt was enough. And with these words he persuaded the Antiochians to accept Demetrius.

Cilicia for Syria with a large army<sup>a</sup> and a great supply of arms, burned and plundered the territory of the Antiochians, whereupon Ptolemy marched against him with his son-in-law Demetrius—for he had already given him his daughter in marriage—and they defeated Alexander and put him to flight.<sup>b</sup> And so he fled to Arabia. Now it happened that in the battle Ptolemy's horse was alarmed on hearing the trumpeting of an elephant, and unseating Ptolemy, threw him to the ground; and when the enemy saw this, they rushed upon him and inflicted many wounds on him about the head, so as to bring him to the point of death; and when his bodyguards snatched him from their hands, he was in so serious a condition that for four days he was unable either to understand anything or to utter a word. Meanwhile the Arab chieftain Zabeilus<sup>c</sup> cut off Alexander's head and sent it to Ptolemy, who recovered from his wounds on the fifth day and coming to his senses, at the same time heard the news of Alexander's death and saw his head—most pleasant things to hear and to see. But soon afterwards having his fill of joy at Alexander's death, he himself passed away. Now Alexander, <sup>a</sup> Grimm, on 1 Macc. x. 1, and Schürer, i. 227 n. 11, point out that Strabo, xvi. 251, calls him Balas Alexander; cf. Justinus xxxv. 1. 6. Evidently Balas was his given name; it is probably from Aram. Ba'al, a hypocoristic theophorous name.

surnamed Balas,<sup>a</sup> was king of Asia for five years,<sup>b</sup> as we have related elsewhere.<sup>c</sup>

(9) But after assuming the royal power, Demetrius, surnamed Nicator,<sup>d</sup> wickedly began to destroy the troops of Ptolemy, quite forgetting the alliance with him and that Ptolemy was his father-in-law and related to him through his marriage with Cleopatra. Accordingly the soldiers fled from his attack<sup>e</sup> to Alexandria, but Demetrius secured possession of the elephants. Meanwhile<sup>f</sup> the high priest Jonathan gathered together an army from all Judaea, and assaulted and besieged the citadel in Jerusalem which held a Macedonian garrison and some of the godless Jews who had abandoned their native customs. These men at first made light of Jonathan's devices for capturing the citadel, for they had confidence in the strength of the place, but some of the worthless fellows in it went out by night and came to Demetrius to inform him of the siege of the citadel. Being, therefore, greatly angered by this report, he took his force and came against Jonathan from Antioch. And when he reached Ptolemais, he wrote and commanded Jonathan to hasten to him there. Thereupon Jonathan, although he did not stop the siege, took with him the elders of the people and the priests, and came to Demetrius, bringing gold and silver and garments and a multitude of presents; and when he presented him with these, he softened the anger of the king; and being honoured by him, he received confirmation of his tenure of the high-priesthood, just as he had obtained it from the kings before him. Nor did Demetrius give credence to the renegades who brought accusations against Jonathan, but when Jonathan requested him to let him pay three hundred talents for all Judaea and the three toparchies of Samaria and Joppa and Galilee,<sup>a</sup> he did so, and gave him a letter concerning all these matters, of which the contents were as follows.

whom he no longer gave any money, whereas the kings before him had continued to give them the same pay even in time of peace, in order to keep them loyal and make them zealous to fight for them if there should ever be need.<sup>a</sup>

upon Demetrius promised not only to grant this request, but also to do more for him at the end of the war which he had on his hands; for, he said, all his time was just now taken up with this.<sup>a</sup> And he asked Jonathan to send him assistance, informing him that his force had revolted. And so Jonathan sent him three thousand picked soldiers.

(3) <sup>b</sup> But the Antiochians, who hated Demetrius because of the ill-treatment they had received at his hands, and also were hostile to him on account of the many crimes which his father Demetrius had committed against them, were waiting for an opportunity which they might seize to fall upon him. And so, becoming aware that assistance had come to Demetrius from Jonathan, and reflecting that unless they acted quickly to anticipate him, he would collect a great force, they hastily seized their arms, and surrounding his palace as if in a siege, blocked the exits and sought to get the king into their hands. But when he saw that the populace of Antioch was ready to make war on him and was under arms, he took his mercenaries and the Jews sent by Jonathan, and engaged the Antiochians; but he was overpowered by them—for many tens of thousands<sup>c</sup> were there—and was beaten. Now when the Jews saw the Antiochians getting the upper hand, they went up to the roofs of the palace buildings, and from there hurled missiles at the Antiochians<sup>d</sup>; and while they themselves, being high above their opponents, were too far away to be hurt by them, they could inflict much damage on them by fighting from above; and so they drove them out of the adjoining houses, which they quickly set on fire; and as the houses were close together and mostly built of wood, the flames spread over the whole city and entirely consumed it. Thereupon the Antiochians, being unable to give help or to control the fire, turned to flight. But the Jews, leaping from roof to roof, pursued them in this manner, and a very strange manner of pursuit it was. Now when the king saw that the Antiochians were striving to save their children and wives, and for that reason were no longer fighting, he set upon them from other narrow streets, and on encountering them, killed many of them, so that they were forced to throw down their full armour and surrender to Demetrius. But he forgave them their acts of defiance, and so put an end to the uprising. He then presented the Jews with the spoils he had gained, and thanked them for having been chiefly responsible for his victory, after which he sent them back to Jerusalem to Jonathan with an acknowledgment of his assistance. Later on, however, he behaved basely toward him and belied his promises, threatening him with war unless he paid him all the kinds of tribute which the Jewish nation was required to pay from the time of the first kings.<sup>a</sup> And this threat he would have carried out, if Tryphon had not kept him from doing so and diverted his preparations against Jonathan into concern for his own interests.<sup>b</sup> For Tryphon had returned to Syria from Arabia with the young Antiochus—he was still a mere lad—, and placed the diadem on his head. And as the entire body of soldiers who had deserted Demetrius because they had not received their pay<sup>a</sup> went over to him, he declared war against Demetrius, and engaging him in battle, overcame him and took possession both of the elephants<sup>b</sup> and of the city of Antioch.

<sup>c</sup> 1 Macc. does not tell where Demetrius fled; Livy, Epit. lii., gives Seleucia (on the coast), which is probably the correct reading, if, as stated by Bevan, II. Sel. ii. 227, Tryphon "had some footing in Cilicia."

(4) Demetrius, therefore, on being beaten, retired to Cilicia,<sup>c</sup> while the young Antiochus sent envoys with letters to Jonathan, proposing to make him his friend and ally, to confirm him as high priest, and to yield to him the four districts which had been added to the territory of the Jews<sup>d</sup>; moreover, he sent him vessels and cups of gold and purple garments, with permission to use them, and presented him with a gold brooch and the right to be called one of his First Friends.<sup>e</sup> He also appointed Jonathan's brother Simon commander of the army from the Ladder<sup>f</sup> of Tyre to Egypt. 1 Macc.
xi. 57.

<sup>a</sup> The clause "which had been added to the territory of the Jews" is not found in 1 Macc. Modern scholars who do not assume that Josephus added it erroneously are divided in opinion concerning the location of the fourth district; some think Ptolemais is meant, some Akkaron (Ekron), given to Jonathan earlier by Alexander Balas (1 Macc. x. 89); Abel, GP ii. 135, suggests Aerabattene. Others, rejecting Josephus' interpretation, assume that Judaea itself is meant. The first three districts are, of course, those taken from Samaria, namely Aphairema, Lydda and Ramathain (cf. above, § 127).

with the honours conferred upon him by Antiochus, sent envoys both to him and to Tryphon, professing to be his friend and ally, and agreeing to fight with him against Demetrius, for, he explained, Demetrius had shown him no gratitude for the many favours he had received from him in time of need, but had, on the contrary, done him further wrong in return for the kindnesses he had received.

(5) <sup>a</sup> Accordingly, when Antiochus gave him leave to gather together a large force from Syria and Phoenicia <sup>b</sup> and fight against Demetrius' generals, Jonathan at once set out for the cities thereof. But these, while they received him splendidly, gave him no troops.<sup>c</sup> And so from there he went to the city of Ascalon, where the inhabitants met him with honours and gifts, whereupon he urged them and every one of the cities in Coele-Syria as well to abandon Demetrius and join Antiochus, and to fight together with him in an attempt to exact satisfaction of Demetrius for whatever wrongs he may have done them; for, he said, there were many reasons why they should be willing to take his side.<sup>d</sup> And when he had persuaded the cities to agree to an alliance with Antiochus, he went to Gaza in order to gain for Antiochus their goodwill also. But he found the people of Gaza much more hostile than he had expected, and they shut their gates against him, and though they had deserted Demetrius,<sup>a</sup> resolved not to go over to Antiochus. This provoked Jonathan to besiege them and to ravage their territory, and investing Gaza with a part of his army, he himself with the rest of it overran their land, destroying and burning it. When the people of Gaza saw in what a plight they were, and that no help was coming to them from Demetrius, but that, on the contrary, distress was already upon them, while the likelihood of assistance was still remote and it was uncertain whether it would come at all, they decided that it would be wise to give up waiting for assistance, and to remedy their distress.<sup>b</sup> Accordingly, they sent to Jonathan and proposed a friendly alliance. For before they experience misfortune, human beings do not understand what is good for them; only when they find themselves in some difficulty and after stubbornly resisting what they might better have done when they were quite unharmed, do they finally choose to do this when once they have been afflicted.<sup>c</sup> And so Jonathan made a friendly agreement with them and accepted their hostages, and sent these off to Jerusalem, while he himself marched through the whole country as far as Damascus.

<sup>b</sup> Variant "to the assistance of the Galilaeans." Josephus here paraphrases I Macc. xi. 63, βουλόμενοι μεταστήσαι αὐτὸν τῆς χρείας, which seems to mean, "wishing to draw him (Jonathan) off from his purpose," i.e. of helping Antiochus

Galilee<sup>a</sup>; for they supposed that they could draw him off from Syria to Galilee as an ally of the latter country,<sup>b</sup> and that he would not suffer the Galilaeans, who were of his own people, to be attacked by the enemy—<sup>c</sup> he went out to meet them, leaving his brother Simon in Judaea; and Simon also gathered together as considerable an army as was possible from this country, and encamped before Bethsur<sup>d</sup> to besiege it, this being a very strong fortress in Judaea, which was held by a garrison of Demetrius. But of this we have spoken before.<sup>e</sup> And when Simon raised earthworks and set up siege-engines and showed much vigour in besieging Bethsur,<sup>f</sup> the garrison were afraid that the place might be taken by storm and they be destroyed; and so they sent to Simon and requested that they might leave the place and go back to Demetrius, on receiving sworn assurances that they should suffer no harm at his hands.<sup>g</sup> He therefore gave them these pledges, and putting them out of the city, stationed his own garrison therein.

(7) Meanwhile Jonathan set out from Galilee from the waters of Gennesar,<sup>h</sup> as they are called—for this was where he was then encamped—, and proceeded vs. Demetrius. Moreover for χρείας Josephus, as Grimm remarks, seems to have read χώρας, as do some LXX MSS.

<sup>c</sup> This reference to the kinship of the Galilaeans and Jews is an addition to 1 Macc. It should be noted that at this time Galilee was still chiefly gentile, and was not judaized until the time of Hyrcanus or Aristobulus; cf. Schürer i. 276.

to the plain of Asor,<sup>a</sup> not knowing that the enemy were there.<sup>b</sup> But as Demetrius' men had learned the day before<sup>c</sup> that Jonathan was coming against them, they set an ambush of men to lie in wait for him in the mountains, while they with the main army went to meet him in the plain. And when Jonathan saw them ready for battle, he too prepared his own soldiers for the contest as well as he could. Thereupon the men placed in ambush by Demetrius' generals appeared on the rear of the Jews, and they, fearing that they would be caught between two fires and be lost, made haste to flee. And so they all abandoned Jonathan, except a few, some fifty in number,<sup>d</sup> who stood their ground, among them Matthias, the son of Absalom, and Judas, the son of Chapsaios,<sup>e</sup> who were the commanders of the entire force; and these with recklessness and despair pushed back the enemy, and dismaying them by their courage and strength, made them turn and flee.<sup>f</sup> And when those of Jonathan's soldiers who had retreated saw the enemy in rout, they rallied after their flight and hastened to pursue them, which they did as far as Kedasa,<sup>g</sup> where the enemy had their camp.

coming is a detail not found in 1 Macc., but possibly based on Josephus' mistaken reading of the clause in 1 Macc. xi. 67, "and they (Jonathan's men) got up early in the mornir.g (ὤρθρισαν τὸ πρωί) to go to the plain of Asor."

(8) Having, therefore, won a brilliant victory, in which he killed two thousand <sup>a</sup> of his foes, Jonathan returned to Jerusalem. And when he saw that by God's providence all his affairs were going to his liking, <sup>b</sup> he sent envoys to the Romans, for he wished to renew the friendship which his nation had formerly had with them. <sup>c</sup> These same <sup>d</sup> envoys he instructed to visit the Spartans on their return from Rome, and to remind them of the Jews' friendship and kinship with them. <sup>e</sup> Accordingly, when they came to Rome, they appeared before the Senate and delivered the message of the high priest Jonathan, saying that he had sent them to confirm the alliance, whereupon the Senate ratified its former decrees concerning friendship with the Jews, and gave them letters to take to all the kings of Asia and Europe and to the magistrates of the cities, <sup>f</sup> in order that through them they might obtain safe-conduct to their own country; and on their return they came to Sparta and delivered to them the letter which they had received from Jonathan, of which the following is a copy. <sup>f</sup> Here Josephus expands and clarifies the obscure statement in 1 Macc. xii. 4, "And they (the Romans) gave them letters to those in every place."

<sup>g</sup> Variant "community (κοινόν) of Jews." 1 Macc. xii. 6 reads, "Jonathan, high priest, and the senate of the nation and the priests and the rest of the people (δῆμος) of the Jews." The variant, κοινόν τῶν Ἰουδαίων, would seem to correspond closely to the expression heber ha-Y'hūdīm found on coins of John Hyrcanus, cf. Schürer i. 269 n. 25; for examples of the narrower meaning of κοινόν (=council) see Schalit, p. 117 n. 14.

and senate and people of Lacedaemon,<sup>a</sup> greeting. If you are well, and your public and private affairs are proceeding satisfactorily, it would be as we wish; we are also well.<sup>b</sup> When in former times there was brought by Demoteles<sup>c</sup> to Onias, who was our high priest, from Areius,<sup>d</sup> your king, a letter, of which a copy is appended,<sup>e</sup> concerning the kinship which exists between us and you, we gladly received the letter and showed ourselves kindly disposed toward both Demoteles and Areius, although we needed no such evidence since the kinship had been made certain through our sacred writings; nor did<sup>f</sup> we see fit to be beforehand in recognizing the relation, lest we might seem to be greedy in seeking the honour conferred by you<sup>g</sup>; and though a long time has passed since our kinship was first discussed,<sup>h</sup> yet, when we offer sacrifices to God on the holy days and memorial days,<sup>i</sup> we continue to entreat Him for your well-being and victory. And though we have been involved earlier, in Ant. xii. 225 ff., by Josephus, who assumes that the Onias meant is Onias III.

<sup>g</sup> The preceding (from "although we needed no such evidence") is an amplification, based on a misunderstanding or different reading of 1 Macc. xii. 9, "We, therefore, although we have no need of these things (i.e. the alliances with Sparta), since we find comfort in the holy writings which we possess."

<sup>h</sup> Variant "was first completed." 1 Macc. xii. 10 has, "Much time has elapsed since you sent to us."

<sup>i</sup> 1 Macc. xii. 11 reads, "both on our festivals and on the other appropriate days we remember, etc." Possibly the "memorial" (or "eponymous") days refer to the Jewish New Year on the 1st of Tishri, called a "memorial of blowing of trumpets" in Lev. xxiii. 24. There may also be a connexion with the usage of "eponymous" in archon eponymos, whose accession marked the new year in several Greek states.

in many wars through the covetousness<sup>a</sup> of our neighbours, we resolved not to trouble you or any other people connected with us. But having overcome our enemies, we have sent to the Romans Numenius, the son of Antiochus,<sup>b</sup> and Antipater, the son of Jason, who belong to our senate and are held in honour by us,<sup>c</sup> and have given them a letter to you also, in order that they may renew our ties with you.<sup>d</sup> You will do well, therefore, also to write us and instruct us concerning anything you may need, being assured that we shall be eager to carry out your wishes in all respects."<sup>e</sup> And the Lacedaemonians received the envoys in a friendly manner, and after making a decree concerning a friendly alliance with the Jews, sent them on their way.

(9) <sup>f</sup> Now at this time there were three schools of thought among the Jews, which held different opinions concerning human affairs; the first being that of the Pharisees, the second that of the Sadducees, and the third that of the Essenes. As for the Pharisees, they say that certain events are the work of Fate,<sup>g</sup> but not all; as to other events, it depends upon ourselves whether they shall take place or not. The sect of Essenes, however, declares that

<sup>f</sup> The following passage on the Jewish sects will be discussed, together with related passages, in an appendix in the last volume of this translation. Here it may suffice to note that Josephus (or his source—probably Nicolas of Damascus) presents the varying religions and social philosophies of the three groups in such a way that they will be more intelligible to Greek readers.

<sup>g</sup> Fate is here, of course, the Greek equivalent of what we should call Providence. Cf. further G. F. Moore, "Fate and Free Will in the Jewish Philosophies according to Josephus," HTR xxii. (1929), 371-389.

Fate is mistress of all things, and that nothing befalls men unless it be in accordance with her decree. But the Sadducees do away with Fate, holding that there is no such thing and that human actions are not achieved in accordance with her decree, but that all things lie within our own power, so that we ourselves are responsible for our well-being, while we suffer misfortune through our own thoughtlessness. Of these matters, however, I have given a more detailed account in the second book of the Jewish History.<sup>a</sup>

(10) Now Demetrius' generals, wishing to make good the defeat they had sustained, gathered together a force larger than their former one, and came against Jonathan. But he had learned of their advance, and went quickly to meet them in the region of Hamath,<sup>b</sup> for he determined not to allow them time enough to invade Judaea. And he encamped at a distance of fifty stades<sup>c</sup> from the enemy, and sent men to spy on their camp and see how it was laid out. When the scouts had reported all these things to him, and by night<sup>d</sup> had captured some men, who revealed to him that the enemy were about to set upon him, he, being forewarned, took measures for his safety by placing outposts outside the camp and keeping his force under arms throughout the entire night; and

he exhorted them to keep their spirits high and their senses alert enough to fight even at night if necessary, that their enemy's plan might not take them un- aware. But when Demetrius' generals discovered that Jonathan knew their plan, they were no longer able to use sound judgment, and were disturbed at having been found out by their foes : nor could they expect to overcome them by any other means, now that their stratagem had failed, for they did not consider themselves a match for Jonathan's men, if they were to fight in the open. They therefore resolved on flight, and after lighting many fires in order that, when the enemy saw them, they might believe they were still there, they retreated.<sup>a</sup> And when Jonathan came close to their camp at dawn and found it deserted, he realized that they had fled, and went in pursuit of them, but was not quick enough to over- take them, for they had already crossed the Eleu- therus river<sup>b</sup> and were on safe ground.<sup>c</sup> He therefore turned back from there to Arabia and made war on the Nabataeans, driving off many of their cattle and taking captives, and then went to Damascus, where he sold them all.<sup>d</sup> About the same time his the Arabs called Zabadaeans, and defeated them and took their spoil. And removing thence he came to Damascus and marched through the whole country." Perhaps Josephus connects the Zabadaeans of 1 Macc. with the Nabataean Arabs, who then lived considerably further south, because he associates them with "Zabdiel the Arab," who cut off the head of Alexander Balas (§ 118 - 1 Macc. xi. 17). Some older commentators, however, (ap. Grimm) mention Zabdini, a district N.W. of Damascus, near the Eleutherus. Whence Josephus derived the detail of Jonathan's sale of the cattle in Damascus is more difficult to explain. Possibly for διώδενσε "he marched through" Josephus read διέδωκε "he distributed" or the like.

brother Simon went through all Judaea and Palestine<sup>a</sup> as far as Ascalon, making their fortresses secure<sup>b</sup> and strengthening them with works and guards,<sup>c</sup> and then went to Joppa, occupied it and introduced a large garrison into it<sup>d</sup>; for he had heard that the inhabitants of Joppa were ready to deliver up their city to Demetrius' generals.

(11) And so, having regulated these matters, both Simon and Jonathan came<sup>e</sup> to Jerusalem. Here Jonathan gathered all the people together in the temple<sup>f</sup> and advised them to repair the walls of Jerusalem, and to set up again the part of the wall round the temple which had been thrown down, and to fortify the temple precincts by high towers,<sup>g</sup> and, in addition, to build still another wall in the midst of the city to keep the garrison in the citadel from reaching the city,<sup>h</sup> and in this way cut off their large supply of provisions; he further advised them to make the fortresses throughout the country far stronger than they were in their present state of security. And so, when this plan was approved by the people, Jonathan himself began the building in the city, and sent out Simon to make the fortresses

in the country secure.<sup>a</sup> Meanwhile <sup>b</sup> Demetrius crossed into Mesopotamia, wishing to occupy both that country and Babylon, and, by taking possession of the Upper Satrapies,<sup>c</sup> to make these his base for an attempt to control the entire kingdom. For the Greeks and Macedonians living in this region were in fact continually sending envoys to him, promising to go over to him, if he would come to them, and to join him in making war on Arsaces, the king of the Parthians.<sup>d</sup> Elated by these hopes, he set out for their country, being determined that, if he should subdue the Parthians and acquire a force of his own, he would make war on Tryphon and drive him out of Syria. And as the people of the country received him gladly, he gathered a force together and made war on Arsaces, but lost his entire army and was himself taken alive,<sup>e</sup> as has been related elsewhere.<sup>f</sup>

Demetrius II is captured by the Parthians.

(vi. 1) As for Tryphon, when he learned that Demetrius' undertaking had come to such an end, he ceased to support Antiochus, but, instead, plotted to kill him and seize the throne himself.<sup>g</sup> There was, in Olymp. 160, 2-139 '8 B.C. For a discussion of the chronology of the campaigns, partly based on cuneiform records, see Debevoise, pp. 22-25.

<sup>g</sup> Josephus, in amplifying 1 Macc. xii. 39, agrees with Appian, Syr. 67-68 and Justinus xxxvi. 1 in placing Tryphon's usurpation after the capture of Demetrius by the Parthians. But, as the coins show and as is indicated by 1 Macc. xiii. 31, 41, Tryphon's reign is to be dated from 142 or 141 B.C.; cf. Schürer i. 172 and Bevan in CAH viii. 527.

however, an obstacle to this plan, namely his fear of Jonathan, who was Antiochus' friend, and for that reason he determined first to get rid of Jonathan, and then make the attempt on Antiochus. And deciding to make an end of him by deceit and treachery, he went from Antioch to Bethsan,<sup>a</sup> called Scythopolis by the Greeks, where Jonathan met him with an army of forty thousand picked men, for he suspected that Tryphon had come to attack him. Accordingly, when Tryphon discovered that Jonathan was ready for battle, he flattered him with presents and friendliness, and ordered his officers to obey Jonathan, for he hoped by these means to convince him of his goodwill and to remove all his suspicions, in order that Jonathan might make light of these and be taken off his guard, foreseeing nothing.<sup>b</sup> He also advised him to dismiss his army, for now, he said, there was no need to bring it with him, since there was no war, and peace reigned over all; he invited him, however, to keep a few men about him and go with him to Ptolemais, saying that he would deliver up that city to him and give into his power all the other strongholds that were in the country; it was for this reason, he said, that he had come there.

(2) And so, having no suspicion of these things, but believing that Tryphon had given him this advice out of goodwill and in sincerity, Jonathan dismissed his army and kept only three thousand men, of whom he left two thousand in Galilee, while he himself with a thousand went to Ptolemais with Tryphon.

But the inhabitants of Ptolemais shut their gates—this they had been ordered to do by Tryphon—,<sup>a</sup> and he <sup>b</sup> took Jonathan alive and killed all the men with him. He also sent troops against the two thousand men who had been left in Galilee,<sup>c</sup> in order to destroy them as well, but they, at the rumour of what had befallen Jonathan and his men, protected themselves with their arms and succeeded in getting out of the country before the arrival of the men dispatched by Tryphon: and when the troops sent against them by Tryphon saw that they were ready to fight for their lives, they returned to Tryphon without molesting them in any way.

(3) But when the inhabitants of Jerusalem heard of the capture of Jonathan and of the destruction of the soldiers with him, they lamented the fate that had befallen him above all, and sorely did they all miss the hero; at the same time, as was natural, a great fear fell upon them and troubled them that now, when they were deprived of both the courage and foresight of Jonathan, the surrounding nations, who were hostile to them and had remained quiet only because of Jonathan, might rise up against them, and that they might be forced to do battle and undergo the most extreme dangers. And what they suspected did in fact befall them, for when the foreign nations heard of Jonathan's death, they began to make war on the Jews, thinking them to be without a leader. As for Tryphon, he too gathered a force together with the intention of going up to Judaea and making war on its inhabitants. There-

"It was for your liberty, my countrymen, that I and my brothers together with our father have gladly <sup>c</sup> dared death, as you cannot fail to know by now. And having such good examples before me, and believing <sup>d</sup> that the men of my house were born to die on behalf of our laws and our religion, I know not any fear great enough to drive this thought from my <sup>e</sup> mind or to introduce in its place a love of life and contempt for glory. Wherefore, as you are not without a leader who is able to suffer and do the greatest things on your behalf, follow me eagerly against whomsoever I may lead you. For neither am I better than my brothers, that I should spare my own life, nor am I worse, that I should flee from or reject what seemed to them the noblest thing of all, that is, to die for the laws and the worship of your God. But in whatever way I must show myself to be a true brother of theirs, in that way I will show it. For I am confident that I shall take vengeance on the enemy, and that I shall deliver you all with your wives and children from their violence, and that with God's help I shall preserve the temple inviolate; for I see that the nations hold you in contempt as being without a leader, and are eager to make war.”<sup>a</sup>

(4) By making this speech Simon restored courage to the multitude, and from having been crushed in spirit through timidity they were now raised to a better spirit and good hope, so that all the people cried out with one voice that Simon should be their leader and have authority over them, and so take the place of his brothers Judas and Jonathan, saying they would be obedient to whatever commands he would give them.<sup>b</sup> Thereupon he quickly collected all those of his own force who were able to fight, and made haste to rebuild the walls of the city; and when he had made it secure with very high and strong towers, he sent one of his friends, Jonathan, the son of Absalom,<sup>c</sup> with an army to Joppa, ordering him to drive out its inhabitants, for he was afraid that they might deliver up the city to Tryphon.<sup>d</sup> He himself remained to guard Jerusalem.<sup>e</sup>

thereafter,<sup>a</sup> he finally came to Adora,<sup>b</sup> a city in Idumaea. Simon, however, with his army marched in the same direction, always encamping opposite him.

(6) But when those in the citadel<sup>c</sup> sent to Tryphon and urged him to hasten to them and send them provisions, he made ready his cavalry in the expectation of being in Jerusalem that very night. A heavy snow, however, fell during the night, which covered the roads and lay so deep that it made the way impassable, especially for the feet of horses, and so prevented his coming to Jerusalem.<sup>d</sup> For this reason Tryphon set out from Adora, and reaching Coele-Syria,<sup>e</sup> hurriedly invaded Galaaditis, where he killed Jonathan<sup>f</sup> and ordered that he be buried, and then returned to Antioch. But Simon sent to the city of Basca<sup>g</sup> and brought back the bones of his brother, which he buried in Modeei,<sup>h</sup> his birthplace, while all the people made great lamentation over him. And Simon also built for his father and brothers a very great monument of polished white marble, and raising it to a great and conspicuous height, made porticoes round it, and erected monolithic pillars, a

 the other hand, omits the panoply and carved ships of the monument. On the architecture see Watzinger, Denkmäler, ii. 22; see also W. W. Tarn in JHS 59 (1939), 125-126.

 term as high priest. The correct figure is 10 years; Jonathan wonderful thing to see.<sup>a</sup> In addition to these he built for his parents and his brothers seven pyramids, one for each, so made as to excite wonder by their size and beauty; and these have been preserved to this day. Such was the zeal which we know to have been shown by Simon in burying Jonathan and building monuments to his family. Now when Jonathan died as high priest, he had been ruler of the nation for four years.<sup>b</sup> These, then, were the circumstances of his death.

(7) And Simon, after being chosen high priest by the populace, in the first year of his high-priesthood liberated the people from servitude to the Macedonians, so that they no longer had to pay tribute to them. This liberation and exemption from tribute came to the Jews in the hundred and seventieth year of the Syrian kingdom, reckoned from the time when Seleucus, surnamed Nicator,<sup>d</sup> occupied Syria.<sup>e</sup> And so great was the respect of the people for Simon that in their contracts with one another, as well as died in 143-2 B.C. (cf. § 201 note b), and was officially recognized as high priest by Alexander Balas in 152 B.C. (cf. § 46 = 1 Macc. x. 21), thus ruling 10 years. Either Josephus is careless here, as in Ant. xx., or there is a scribal error. Perhaps, as Reinach suggests, the τεσσαρας is an expansion of the numeral letter δ', which in turn was an abbreviation of an original δέκα "ten."

in public documents, they dated them "from<sup>a</sup> the first year of Simon, the benefactor and ethnarch of the Jews"<sup>b</sup>; for under his rule they prospered exceedingly and overcame the foes<sup>c</sup> that surrounded them.<sup>d</sup> For Simon subdued the city of Gazara<sup>e</sup> and Joppa and Jamneia, and also took the citadel at Jerusalem by siege, razing it to the ground that it might not serve his foes as a base to occupy and do mischief from it, as they were then doing.<sup>f</sup> Having done this, he thought it would be an excellent thing and to his advantage to level also the hill on which the citadel stood, in order that the temple might be higher than this. Accordingly, he called the people to an assembly and sought to persuade them to have this done, reminding them how they had suffered at the hands of the garrison and the Jewish renegades, and also warning them of what they would suffer if a foreign ruler should again occupy their realm, and a garrison should be placed therein. With these words he persuaded the people,

War (cf. § 225 note c). Various explanations have been given of Josephus' abandonment of 1 Macc. at this point; some scholars hold that the last three and a half chapters of 1 Macc. were a late addition, not known to Josephus (cf. the discussions in Thackeray, Josephus, p. 86 and Ricciotti, Introduzione, pp. 140-143). It is more likely that Josephus found it more convenient to use only his Hellenistic sources for Simon's period than to continue excerpting from them to fill out the narrative of 1 Macc.

<sup>a</sup> Josephus' statements here and in B.J. i. 50 that Simon levelled the (S.E.) hill, on which the citadel (Akra) stood, are in contradiction to 1 Macc. xiv. 37, which says that Simon fortified the citadel. More correct is Josephus' statement in B.J. v. 139 that the Hasmonaeans (i.e. one of Simon's successors—probably John Hyrcanus) levelled the citadel hill, cf. Dr. Thackeray's note on the last passage.

since he was recommending what was to their advantage. And so they all set to and began to level the hill, and without stopping work night or day, after three whole years brought it down to the ground and the surface of the plain. And thereafter the temple stood high above everything else, once the citadel and the hill on which it stood had been demolished. Such was the nature of the things accomplished in the time of Simon.<sup>a</sup>

nature; for while he was a private person he had courted the multitude and assumed a character of mildness, thus leading them on to do as he wished, but once he had obtained the royal power, he threw off all pretence and became the Tryphon he really was. Now by this course he strengthened his foes, for the army, which hated him, revolted and went over to Cleopatra,<sup>a</sup> the wife of Demetrius, who with her children was at that time shut up in Seleucia. And as Demetrius' brother Antiochus, surnamed Soter,<sup>b</sup> was wandering about, for at Tryphon's instance no city admitted him, Cleopatra sent to him, inviting him to come and marry her and take the throne.<sup>c</sup> The reason why she invited Antiochus on these terms was partly that her friends persuaded her to do so, and partly that she feared that some of the people of Seleucia might deliver up the city to Tryphon.

(2) Antiochus, therefore, came to Seleucia, and as his strength increased daily, he set out to make war on Tryphon; and having defeated him in battle, he drove him out of Upper Syria into Phoenicia, where he pursued him, and when he took refuge in Dora, a fortress difficult to take, besieged him there. He also sent envoys to Simon, the high priest of the Jews, to propose a friendly alliance.<sup>d</sup> And Simon gladly accepted his offer, and lavishly supplied the

<sup>b</sup> More exactly 4 years, from 142 to 138 B.C., according to the coinage, cf. Bevan in CAH viii. 527.

<sup>c</sup> The war between Antiochus VII and Simon is described in greater detail in 1 Macc. xv. 38-xvi. 10.

At about this point in Ant. begins the parallelism between soldiers who were besieging Dora with great sums of money and provisions, which he sent to Antiochus, so that for a short while he was considered one of his closest friends.<sup>a</sup> As for Tryphon, he fled from Dora to Apamea, and on being besieged and captured there, was put to death, after reigning three years.<sup>b</sup>

(3) <sup>c</sup> Antiochus, however, through covetousness and dishonesty forgot the services which Simon had rendered him in his necessity, and giving a force of soldiers to Cendebaeus, one of his friends, sent him off to plunder Judaea and seize Simon. But Simon heard of Antiochus' lawless conduct, and though he was now an old man, nevertheless was aroused by the unjust treatment he had received from Antiochus, and being filled with a spirit stronger than his years, took command in the war like a young man.<sup>d</sup> And so he sent his sons <sup>e</sup> on ahead <sup>f</sup> with the soldiers who were the best fighters, while he himself advanced <sup>g</sup>

Ant. and B.J. Josephus in writing this portion of Ant. made use of the same sources (chiefly Nicolas of Damascus and Strabo) which he had before him earlier in writing B.J. i. and ii., but with variations in wording, some corrections and considerable additions. Moreover, as Dr. Thackeray has succinctly formulated the relation between the parallel accounts (in an unpublished note), "Ant. besides reverting to and making fuller use of the original sources, has had B.J. before him (sic) and aimed at avoiding repetition. The greater freedom with which B.J. had treated the source left Ant. at liberty to adhere more closely to its language." See further the Appendix on Josephus' sources, in the last volume of this translation.

<sup>d</sup> According to 1 Macc. xvi. 3 Simon took no part in the war and gave the command to his sons; but the wording of vs. 4-7 might easily lead one to suppose that the pronominal subject is Simon (Luc. supplies the name Joannes = John).

respects he was superior to him, in one thing he was at a disadvantage, that is, in feeling pity for his mother and brothers. For Ptolemy had brought them up on to the wall and maltreated them in the sight of all, threatening to hurl them down headlong if Hyrcanus did not give up the siege. And so, reflecting that the more he slackened his efforts to capture the place, the greater was the kindness he would show those dearest to him by sparing them suffering, Hyrcanus relaxed his eagerness. His mother, however, stretched out her hands, beseeching him not to weaken on her account, but to give way to his anger so much the more, and make every effort to take the place and get his foe into his power and avenge those dearest to him. For, she said, it would be pleasant for her to die in torment if the enemy,<sup>a</sup> who was doing these things to them, paid the penalty for his crimes against them. Now when his mother said these things, Hyrcanus was seized with a powerful desire to capture the fortress, but when he saw her being beaten and torn apart, he became unnerved and was overcome with compassion at the way in which his mother was being treated. But while the siege was being protracted in this manner, there came round the year in which the Jews are wont to remain inactive, for they observe this custom every seventh year, just as on the seventh day.<sup>b</sup> And Ptolemy, being relieved from the war for this reason, killed the brothers and mother of Hyrcanus, and fourth year of Antiochus' reign and the first of Hyrcanus' was 135-4 B.C., while the 162nd Olympiad began in July 132 B.C. Although Porphyry (ap. Eusebius, Chron. ed.

after doing so, fled to Zenon, surnamed Cotylas, who was ruler<sup>a</sup> of the city of Philadelphia.<sup>b</sup>

(2) But Antiochus, being resentful of the injuries he had received from Simon, invaded Judaea in the fourth year of his reign and the first of Hyrcanus' rule, in the hundred and sixty-second Olympiad.<sup>c</sup> And after ravaging the country, he shut Hyrcanus up in the city itself, which he surrounded with seven camps, but at first he accomplished nothing whatever because of the strength of the walls and the valour of the besieged, and also, indeed, because of the lack of water, although of this they were relieved by a great downpour of rain which came with the setting of the Pleiades. Thereupon on the north side of the wall, where the ground happened to be level, he erected a hundred towers, each three stories high, on which he mounted companies of soldiers. And every day he made an attack, and by cutting a deep double<sup>d</sup> ditch of great width, shut the inhabitants up within the walls. They, however, contrived to make frequent sallies against the enemy, and whenever they took them off their guard, inflicted much in the (third year of the) 162nd Olympiad, Schürer, i. 259 note 5, suspects the text of Eusebius; he partially reconciles the contradictions by suggesting that the war lasted from 134 to 132 B.C. That the siege lasted more than a year is indicated, as Schürer points out, by the fact that near its beginning occurred the November rains (δνομένης πλειάδος, § 237) and that it was still going on the following October, when the festival of Tabernacles came round (§ 241). Moreover, if Josephus' source here used the so-called Macedonian Olympiad era which preceded the Attic by a year (according to Bickermann, cf. Ant. xii. 321 note d), the discrepancy becomes still less. No dates or details of the siege are given in the parallel, B.J. i. 61.

damage on them, and if the enemy perceived them, they easily retired. When, however, Hyrcanus observed that his great numbers were a disadvantage because of the rapid consumption of provisions by them, and that the work which was being accomplished in no way corresponded to the number of hands, he separated from the rest those who were useless, and drove them out, and retained only those who were in the prime of life and able to fight.<sup>a</sup> But Antiochus, on his side, prevented those who had been rejected from going out, and so, wandering about the walls between the lines, they were the first to be exhausted by their cruel sufferings and were on the point of perishing miserably. Just then, however, the festival of Tabernacles came round, and those within the city took pity on them and admitted them again. And Hyrcanus sent to Antiochus, requesting a truce of seven days on account of the festival, which Antiochus, deferring to his piety toward the Deity, granted and moreover sent a magnificent sacrifice, consisting of bulls with gilded horns and cups of gold and silver filled with all kinds of spices. And those who were at the gates received the sacrifice from the men who brought it, and took it to the sanctuary, while Antiochus feasted his army, being very different from Antiochus Epiphanes who, when he captured the city, sacrificed swine upon the altars and bespattered the temple with their grease, thus perverting the rites of the Jews and the piety of their fathers, by which acts the nation was driven to war and became his implacable enemy.<sup>a</sup> This Antiochus, on the other hand, because of his exaggerated devoutness was by all men called Eusebes (the Pious).<sup>b</sup>

(3) Now Hyrcanus, being favourably impressed by his affability, and learning of his reverence for the Deity, sent envoys to him with the request that he restore to the Jews their native form of government. And Antiochus did not thrust his letter aside, nor did he take note of those who urged him to extirpate this nation because of the separateness of their way of life,<sup>c</sup> but, as he believed that in all things they had acted with piety, he replied to the envoys that the besieged should hand over their arms, pay tribute to him for Joppa and the other cities bordering on Judaea, and receive a garrison, and that on these terms they might be freed of the war. But the Jews, while they were ready to accept the other terms, would not agree to the garrison, since they did not come into contact with other peoples because of their separateness. In place of the garrison, however, ἔθνῶν ἀκοινωνήτους εἶναι τῆς πρὸς ἄλλο ἔθνος ἐπιμιξίας καὶ πολεμίους ὑπολαμβάνειν πάντας, "they alone of all nations do not take part in social intercourse with other nations, and regard them all as enemies." The charge of ἀμυξία "separateness" appears elsewhere in pagan writers on Judaism, cf. the summary in Juster i. 46. Classic expression is given to this accusation by Haman (Est. iii. 8), cf. Ant. xi. 212, where Josephus supplies the adjective ἀμικτον "unfriendly" or "clannish." Incidentally, much is to be said for the view of Derenbourg, pp. 76-78, that ἀμυξία is the translation (better, the equivalent) of Heb. p'risēth, i.e. separatism from paganism, whence the name Pharisees "separatists," applied to this group by their priestly and militarist opponents (the Sadducees); see further the Appendix on the Jewish sects in the last volume of this translation.

<sup>a</sup> This brother's name is unknown. Two of Hyrcanus' brothers had recently been killed (cf. § 235) and, as Reinach notes, Josephus in § 228 seems to imply that they were his only brothers.

<sup>b</sup> Some historians take this to mean that only the battlements of the walls (στεφάνην = “crown”) were destroyed. But, as Schürer points out, the other ancient sources speak of the destruction of the walls themselves (later rebuilt by Hyrcanus, cf. 1 Macc. xvi. 23); cf. Diodorus xxxiv. 1 and Porphyry (ap. Eusebius, Chron. ed. Schoene i. 255).

they offered hostages and five hundred talents of silver, three hundred of which and the hostages they gave at once among them being Hyrcanus' own brother<sup>a</sup>; and these the king accepted, and pulled down the walls encircling the city.<sup>b</sup> And so, on these conditions, Antiochus raised the siege and withdrew.<sup>c</sup>

(4) Hyrcanus also opened the tomb of David, who surpassed all other kings in wealth, and took out three thousand talents of silver, and drawing on this sum, became the first Jewish king to support foreign troops.<sup>d</sup> And he made a friendly alliance with Antiochus, and admitting him into the city, lavishly and generously supplied his army with all they needed. And when Antiochus undertook an expedition against the Parthians, Hyrcanus set out with him.<sup>e</sup> On this we have the testimony of Nicolas of Damascus, who writes as follows. "After defeating Indates, the Parthian general, and setting up a trophy at the Lycus river," Antiochus remained there two days at the request of the Jew Hyrcanus because of a festival of his nation on which it was not customary for the Jews to march out." Nor does he speak

<sup>d</sup> According to Ant. vii. 393 Hyrcanus gave part of this money to Antiochus to raise the siege. It was probably on this occasion that Hyrcanus appealed for help to Rome, cf. Ant. xiii. 260-265, xiv. 247-255.

<sup>a</sup> This passage, as Reinach notes, may have a bearing on the relations of Hyrcanus with the Pharisees and Sadducees (see below, §§ 288 ff.), if we assume that Pentecost fell on the first day of the week (Sunday) not by accident, as it might in the Pharisaic system of the calendar, but by intention, as in the Sadduceean system, based on a literal interpretation of Leviticus xxiii. 11 ff.

falsely in saying this ; for the festival of Pentecost had come round, following the Sabbath.<sup>a</sup> and we are not permitted to march either on the Sabbath or on a festival. But on engaging Arsaces the Parthian in battle, Antiochus lost a great part of his army and was himself slain <sup>b</sup> ; thereupon his brother Demetrius <sup>c</sup> succeeded to the throne of Syria, after Arsaces had released him from captivity at the time when Antiochus invaded Parthia, as has already been related elsewhere.<sup>d</sup>

(ix. 1) So soon as he heard of the death of Antiochus,<sup>e</sup> Hyrcanus marched out against the cities of Syria, thinking to find them, as indeed they were, empty of fighting men and of any able to deliver them. And he captured Medaba <sup>f</sup> after six months, during which his army suffered great hardships ; next he captured Samoga <sup>g</sup> and its environs, and, in addition to these, Shechem and Garizein and the Cuthaeen nation, which lives near the temple built after the model of the sanctuary at Jerusalem, which Alexander permitted their governor Sanaballetes to build for the sake of his son-in-law Manasses, the

Concerning the letters,<sup>a</sup> however, they replied that they would deliberate when the Senate should have leisure from its own affairs, and that they would take care that no similar injustice should be done them in future, and also that the praetor Fannius should give them money from the public treasury for their return home. Accordingly Fannius dismissed the Jewish envoys in this manner, giving them money from the public treasury and a decree of the Senate to those who were to conduct them on their way and furnish them a safe return home.

(3) <sup>b</sup> Such, then, was the situation under the high priest Hyrcanus. As for King Demetrius, who was eager to march against Hyrcanus, he found neither the time nor the occasion for doing so, as both the Syrians and his soldiers were hostile to him—for he was a scoundrel—and sent envoys to Ptolemy, surnamed Physcon,<sup>c</sup> asking him to give them someone of the family of Seleucus to occupy the throne. Ptolemy therefore sent Alexander, also called Zebinas,<sup>d</sup> with an army, and a battle with Demetrius took place,<sup>e</sup> in which Demetrius was defeated; he then fled to

According to Justinus, xxxix. 1. 4, Zebinas was an Egyptian youth whom Ptolemy put forward as an adopted son of Antiochus Sidetes; according to Porphyry (ap. Eusebius, Chron. ed. Later,<sup>c</sup> in a battle with Demetrius' son Antiochus, surnamed Grypus,<sup>d</sup> he was defeated and killed.

(x. 1) But when Antiochus took over the royal power in Syria, he was wary of marching upon Judaea, for he heard that his brother on his mother's side—he too was called Antiochus<sup>e</sup>—was collecting a force against him from Cyzicus.<sup>f</sup> And so he decided to remain in his own land and prepare himself to meet the incursion of his brother, who was surnamed Cyzicenus because he had been brought up in the city of Cyzicus, being the son of Antiochus, surnamed Soter,<sup>g</sup> who had met death among the Parthians; this Antiochus (Soter) was a brother of Grypus' father Demetrius, for it so happened that Cleopatra had been married to the two brothers, as we have narrated elsewhere.<sup>h</sup> And Antiochus Cyzicenus came into Syria and waged continuous war upon his brother

Grypus ruled alone; from 113 to 111 B.C. he was kept out of Syria by Cyzicenus; in 111 B.C. he returned and took the greater part of the country from Cyzicenus, who had to be content with ruling Coele-Syria (Phoenicia and Palestine). Hostilities between them continued until the death of Grypus in 96 B.C.

for many years.<sup>a</sup> But during all this time Hyrcanus lived in peace<sup>b</sup>; for after the death of Antiochus (Sidetes) he too revolted from the Macedonians, and no longer furnished them any aid<sup>c</sup> either as a subject or as a friend; instead, his government progressed and flourished greatly during the reign of Alexander Zebinas<sup>d</sup> and especially under these brothers. For the war between them gave Hyrcanus leisure to exploit Judaea undisturbed, with the result that he amassed a limitless sum of money. Moreover, when Cyzicenus ravaged his land,<sup>e</sup> he openly showed his intention,<sup>f</sup> and seeing that Antiochus had been deserted by his Egyptian allies<sup>g</sup> and that both he and his brother were faring badly in their struggle with each other, he<sup>h</sup> showed contempt for both of them.

<sup>a</sup> Marisa, an Idumaean city, had recently been captured by Hyrcanus, cf. § 257; but it is difficult, as Reinach remarks, to see how the Samaritans could have got to a city in Idumaea. I suggest, therefore, that "Marisa" is a textual error for "Samaria," meaning that part of Samaria the territory, not the city, presumably colonized by Hyrcanus after he took Shechem and other Samaritan cities, cf. § 255.

done to the people of Marisa, who were colonists and allies of the Jews.<sup>a</sup> Accordingly he made a trench round the city on all sides, and a double wall for a distance of some eighty stades,<sup>b</sup> and placed his sons Antigonus and Aristobulus in charge. And as they pressed the siege, the Samaritans were finally brought by famine to such a state of need<sup>c</sup> that they were forced to take for food even things that are not used for that purpose, and at the same time to call upon Antiochus Cyzicenus for help.<sup>d</sup> He readily came to their assistance, but he was defeated by Aristobulus and was pursued by the brothers as far as Scythopolis, where he made his escape. The brothers then returned to Samaria and once more shut up the Samaritans within the wall,<sup>e</sup> so that a second time they had to call upon this same Antiochus for aid; he thereupon applied to Ptolemy Lathyrus<sup>f</sup> for six thousand men, which the latter sent to him against the wish of his mother,<sup>g</sup> who all but drove him from the kingdom when she heard of it; and with these Egyptians Antiochus at first invaded and ravaged Hyrcanus' territory like a brigand, for he dared not meet him in battle face to face—his force was not adequate for that—, but supposed that by damaging

(3) But as Callimandrus attacked the enemy too recklessly, he was put to rout and killed on the spot. As for Epicrates, out of greed for money he openly betrayed Scythopolis and other places near it to the Jews,<sup>b</sup> but could not bring the siege of Samaria to an end. And so Hyrcanus captured the city after besieging it for a year, but not being content with that alone, he effaced it entirely and left it to be swept away by the mountain-torrents,<sup>c</sup> for he dug beneath it until it fell into the beds of the torrents, and so removed all signs of its ever having been a city.<sup>d</sup> Now about the high priest Hyrcanus an extraordinary story<sup>e</sup> is told how the Deity communicated with him, for they say that on the very day on which his sons fought with Cyzicenus, Hyrcanus, who was alone in the temple, burning incense as high priest,<sup>f</sup> heard a voice saying that his sons had just defeated occupied the country between Scythopolis (mod. Beisān) and Mount Carmel.

<sup>f</sup> Presumably on the Day of Atonement, on the 10th of Tishri, cf. Lev. xvi. 12 ff.; if that is so, there is a chronological discrepancy between this story and the notice in Megillath Ta'anith (cf. above, note d). The rabbinic parallels to Josephus' account do not indicate when Hyrcanus received the revelation.

Antiochus. And on coming out of the temple he revealed this to the entire multitude, and so it actually happened. This, then, was how the affairs of Hyrcanus were going.

(4) At this time not only were the Jews in Jerusalem and in the country (of Judaea) in a flourishing condition, but also those who lived in Alexandria and in Egypt and Cyprus. For Queen Cleopatra, who was at war with her son Ptolemy, surnamed Lathyrus,<sup>a</sup> appointed as her generals Chelkias<sup>b</sup> and Ananias,<sup>c</sup> sons of the Onias who had built the temple in the nome of Heliopolis, which was similar to the one at Jerusalem, as we have related before.<sup>d</sup> And having entrusted her army to them, Cleopatra did nothing without their approval, as Strabo of Cappadocia also testifies, when he writes as follows. "For the majority, both those who came back from exile and those who were later sent to Cyprus by Cleopatra, immediately went over to Ptolemy. And only the Jews of the district named for Onias remained faithful to her, because their fellow-citizens<sup>e</sup> Chelkias and Ananias were held in special favour by the queen."<sup>f</sup> This, then, is what Strabo says.

<sup>f</sup> Gutschmid (cited by Fuchs, p. 16) suggests that Chelkias is the unnamed general of Cleopatra III, referred to in Justinus xxxix. 4, who was executed for letting Ptolemy escape her hands. Reinach, REJ xl. (1900), pp. 50 ff., identifies as a son of Chelkias the στρατηγός of the Heliopolitan nome mentioned in an inscription of 102 B.C. The struggle referred to in the excerpt from Strabo was that between Ptolemy Lathyrus and Cleopatra III during the years 107-102 B.C., cf. Bevan, Ptol. pp. 329-331.

<sup>a</sup> The following story of Hyrcanus' break with the Pharisees, §§ 288-298, has a parallel in the Bab. Talmud, Yiddushin 66a, for which see Derenbourg, pp. 79-81: there the Hasmonaean ruler is called Yannai (= Alexander Jannaeus)

(5) "As for Hyrcanus, the envy of the Jews was aroused against him by his own successes and those of his sons<sup>b</sup>; particularly hostile to him were the Pharisees, who are one of the Jewish schools, as we have related above.<sup>c</sup> And so great is their influence with the masses that even when they speak against a king or high priest,<sup>d</sup> they immediately gain credence. Hyrcanus too was a disciple of theirs, and was greatly loved by them. And once he invited them to a feast and entertained them hospitably, and when he saw that they were having a very good time, he began by saying that they knew he wished to be righteous and in everything he did tried to please God and them—for the Pharisees profess such beliefs; at the same time he begged them, if they observed him doing anything wrong or straying from the right path, to lead him back to it and correct him. But they testified to his being altogether virtuous, and he was delighted with their praise. However, one of the guests, named Eleazar,<sup>e</sup> who had an evil nature and took pleasure in dissension, said, "Since you have asked to be told the truth, if you wish to be righteous, give up the high-priesthood and be content with governing the people." And when Hyrcanus

asked him for what reason he should give up the high-priesthood, he replied, "Because we have heard from our elders that your mother was a captive in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes."<sup>a</sup> But the story was false, and Hyrcanus was furious with the man, while all the Pharisees were very indignant.

(6) Then a certain Jonathan,<sup>b</sup> one of Hyrcanus' close friends, belonging to the school of Sadducees, who hold opinions opposed to those of the Pharisees, said that it had been with the general approval of all the Pharisees that Eleazar had made his slanderous statement; and this, he added, would be clear to Hyrcanus if he inquired of them what punishment Eleazar deserved for what he had said. And so Hyrcanus asked the Pharisees what penalty they thought he deserved—for, he said, he would be convinced that<sup>c</sup> the slanderous statement had not been made with their approval if they fixed a penalty commensurate with the crime—, and they replied that Eleazar deserved stripes and chains; for they did not think it right to sentence a man to death for calumny, and anyway the Pharisees are naturally lenient in the matter of punishments. At this Hyrcanus became very angry and began to believe that the fellow had slandered him with their approval. And Jonathan in particular inflamed his anger, and so worked upon him that he brought him to join the Sadduceean party and desert the Pharisees, and to abrogate the regulations<sup>d</sup> which they had established for the people, and punish those who observed them. Out of this, of course, grew the hatred of the masses for him and his sons, but of this we shall speak hereafter.<sup>a</sup> For the present I wish merely to explain that the Pharisees had passed on to the people certain regulations handed down by former generations and not recorded in the Laws of Moses, for which reason they are rejected by the Sadduceean group, who hold that only those regulations should be considered valid which were written down (in Scripture), and that those which had been handed down by former generations<sup>b</sup> need not be observed. And concerning these matters the two parties came to have controversies and serious differences, the Sadducees having the confidence of the wealthy alone but no following among the populace, while the Pharisees have the support of the masses. But of these two schools and of the Essenes a detailed account has been given<sup>c</sup> in the second book of my Judaica.<sup>d</sup>

the gift of prophecy <sup>a</sup>; for the Deity was with him and enabled him to foresee and foretell the future; so, for example, he foretold of his two elder sons that they would not remain masters of the state. And the story of their downfall is worth relating, to show how far they were from having <sup>b</sup> their father's good fortune.

(xi. 1) After their father's death the eldest son Aristobulus saw fit to transform the government into a kingdom, which he judged the best form, and he was the first to put a diadem on his head, <sup>c</sup> four hundred and eighty-one years and three months after the time when the people were released from the Babylonian captivity and returned to their own country. <sup>d</sup> Now of his brothers he loved only Antigonus, who was next in age, and considered him worthy of a position like his own, while he kept his other brothers in chains. He also imprisoned his mother, who had disputed the royal power with him—for Hyrcanus had left her mistress of the realm—, and carried his cruelty so far that he caused her to die of starvation in prison. And to the death of his mother he added that of biblical sense, cf. Ant. xii. 318 note e, and Moore, Judaism i. 421.

his brother Antigonus, whom he seemed especially to love and had made his associate in the kingdom, for he was alienated from him by calumnies which at first he did not believe, disregarding the things that were said, partly because he loved Antigonus and partly because he believed that he was being calumniated out of envy. But on one occasion when Antigonus had returned from a campaign with glory,<sup>a</sup> as the season of the festival during which tabernacles are erected to God was at hand, it chanced that Aristobulus fell ill, and Antigonus, arrayed in great splendour and with his heavy-armed soldiers about him, went up to the temple to celebrate the festival and to pray earnestly for his brother's recovery; thereupon the unscrupulous men who were bent on disrupting the harmonious relation between them, found in Antigonus' ambitious display and in the successes he had achieved, a pretext to go to the king and maliciously exaggerate the pomp of his appearance at the festival, saying that everything that had been done was out of keeping with the behaviour of a private person and that his actions rather had the indications of one who imagined himself a king, and that he had come with a strong body of troops with the intention of killing Aristobulus, reasoning that it would be absurd for him to believe that he had won any great distinction in having a share in high office when he might just as well be king himself.

brother and at the same time thinking of his own safety, stationed his bodyguards at intervals in a dark underground passage—for he was lying ill in the castle afterwards called Antonia<sup>a</sup>—and gave orders that none of them should touch Antigonus if he were unarmed, but should kill him if he came to the king with his armour on. Moreover he himself sent to Antigonus, asking him to come unarmed. But the queen and the men who were plotting with her against Antigonus persuaded the messenger to say the opposite, namely that his brother had heard that he had equipped himself with arms and military gear,<sup>b</sup> and invited him to come to him armed, in order that he might see his equipment. Accordingly, Antigonus, who had no suspicion of foul play and was confident of his brother's friendly feeling towards him, came to Aristobulus just as he was, in full armour, to show him his arms. But when he reached Straton's Tower, as it is called, just where the very dark passage was, the bodyguards killed him. Now his death clearly proves that there is nothing more powerful than envy and calumny, nor anything that more easily disrupts friendship and the ties of nature than these influences. And in this connexion one may well wonder at the story of a certain Judas of the Essene group, who had never been known to speak falsely in his prophecies, but when he saw Antigonus passing by the temple, cried out to his companions and disciples, who were together with him for the purpose of receiving instruction in forebais (cf. B.J. i. 76), rebuilt by the Hasmonaeans and later by Herod, cf. Ant. xii. 251 note d. To the literature cited there add Watzinger, Denkmäler ii. 31 ff.

telling the future, that it would be well for him to die as one who had spoken falsely, since Antigonus was still alive, although he had foretold that he would die at the place called Straton's Tower, and now he saw him alive <sup>a</sup>; for the place where he had foretold that Antigonus would be murdered was some six hundred stades <sup>b</sup> from where he now was, and the greater part of the day had already passed, so that his prophecy was unfortunately likely to prove false. But as he was saying this and lamenting, the news came that Antigonus had been killed in the underground passage, which was also called Straton's Tower—by the same name, that is, as Caesarea on the sea-coast.<sup>c</sup> It was this fact, therefore, that had confused the prophet.

(3) But Aristobulus was soon seized by remorse for the murder of his brother, and this was followed by illness, his mind being so troubled by his guilty deed that his inward parts were corrupted by intense pain, and he vomited blood. And once one of the servants who waited on him was carrying this blood away and slipped and spilled it—by divine providence, I believe—on the very spot where the stains made by the blood of the murdered Antigonus were still to be seen. Thereupon a cry went up from those who saw this that the servant had spilled the blood there deliberately, and when Aristobulus heard it, he asked what the reason for it was, and as they did not tell him, he became still more determined to find out, for in such cases men naturally suspect the worst in what is covered by silence. But when, under his threats and the constraint of fear, they

<sup>c</sup> As we have no coin of Aristobulus I with a Greek inscription, we do not know for certain whether he officially used the title Philhellene. But Schürer's suggestion, i. 275 n. 6, that χρηματίσας Φιλέλλην means only "he behaved told him the truth, he was stricken in mind by his consciousness of guilt, and weeping freely, with deep groans exclaimed, "I was not destined, I see, to escape the notice of God in committing such impious and unholy crimes, but swift punishment has overtaken me for the murder of my kin. How long, then, O most shameless body, will you keep within you the life that is forfeit to the spirits of my brother and mother? Why, instead of giving this up to them at one stroke, do I merely offer my blood drop by drop as a libation to those who have been so foully murdered?"<sup>a</sup> And scarcely had he spoken these words when he died; in his reign of one year,<sup>b</sup> with the title of Philhellene,<sup>c</sup> he conferred many benefits on his country, for he made war on the Ituraeans<sup>d</sup> and acquired a good part of their territory for Judaea and compelled the inhabitants, if they wished to remain in their country, to be circumcised and to live in accordance with the laws of the Jews. He had a kindly nature, and was wholly given to modesty, as Strabo also testifies on the authority of Timagenes,<sup>e</sup> writing as follows. "This man was a kindly person and very serviceable to the Jews, for he acquired additional territory for them, and brought over to them a portion of the Ituraean nation, whom he joined to them by the bond of circumcision."

like a Philhellene" can hardly be accepted in preference to the translation given above, as Meyer rightly insists, Ursprung ii. 277 n. 1. The detail about Aristobulus' title and the following section to § 320 have no parallels in B.J.

<sup>a</sup> Variant "Salome" (her name is not given in the parallel, B.J. i. 85). Her Heb. name was probably Šelamšiyôn (cf. Σαλαμψιῶν, Ant. xviii. 170), of which "Salome" might be a diminutive, cf. Derenbourg, p. 102, n. 2. "Salina" is probably a hellenized form of her Heb. name, perhaps influenced by that of her contemporary, Selene (cf. § 420). That Josephus considered Aristobulus' widow to be identical with Alexander Jannaeus' wife Alexandra is clear from the context and chronology, although he does not make this explicit by saying that Salina married Jannaeus. Madden, p. 71, is one of the few scholars who distinguish between the

(xii. 1) On the death of Aristobulus his wife Salina,<sup>a</sup> by the Greeks called Alexandra, released his brothers—for Aristobulus had imprisoned them, as we have said before—,<sup>b</sup> and appointed as king Jannaëus,<sup>c</sup> also known as Alexander, who was best fitted for this office by reason of his age and his evenness of temper<sup>d</sup>; but it had been his fate to be hated by his father from the time he was born, and never to come into his sight so long as he lived. Now the reason for this hatred is said to have been as follows. Of all his sons Hyrcanus loved best the two elder ones, Antigonus and Aristobulus; and once when God appeared to him in his sleep, he asked Him which of his sons was destined to be his successor. And when God showed him the features<sup>e</sup> of Alexander, he was grieved that this one should be the heir of all his possessions, and so he let him be brought up in Galilee from his birth.<sup>f</sup> God, however, did not deceive Hyrcanus. two queens. On the problem whether the widow of the presumably childless Aristobulus was required by Jewish law to contract a levirate marriage with his brother see the discussions in Aptowitz xviii-xx and Klausner ii. 122 f.

<sup>e</sup> Chamonard translates χαρακτήρας as "letters of the name," and Reinach notes that the meaning of the Gr. is very doubtful. It seems clear to me.

<sup>f</sup> This does not necessarily mean that Galilee was wholly judaized in Hyrcanus' time, cf. Schürer i. 276 n. 10.

(2) <sup>b</sup> Then, leaving his realm in a condition which he thought advantageous to himself, Alexander marched against Ptolemais, and after defeating its inhabitants in battle, he shut them up in the city and surrounding it, besieged them. For of the cities on the coast there remained only Ptolemais and Gaza to be subdued by him, and also Straton's Tower <sup>c</sup> and Dora,<sup>d</sup> which the local ruler <sup>e</sup> Zoilus held. Now as Antiochus Philometor <sup>f</sup> and his brother Antiochus, surnamed Cyzicenus, were fighting each other and destroying their own forces, no help could be given by them to the people of Ptolemais; but while they were being hard pressed in the siege, Zoilus, who held Straton's Tower, appeared with a company of soldiers that he maintained,<sup>g</sup> and as he had ambitions to make himself absolute ruler because of the struggle between the two kings, he gave some slight help to the people of Ptolemais. Nor were the kings so friendly to them that they could hope for any assistance from them, for both of them were in the position of athletes whose strength is exhausted but who are ashamed to yield, and so continue to prolong the commonacans' struggle to wrest Palestinian territory from the Seleucids, cf. §§ 274 ff.

test by periods of inactivity and rest. The only hope that was left them was in the sovereigns of Egypt<sup>a</sup> and in Ptolemy Lathyrus, the ruler of Cyprus, who had been driven from his realm by his mother Cleopatra, and had come to Cyprus.<sup>b</sup> And so the people of Ptolemais sent to him and begged him to come to their aid and save them from the hands of Alexander, by whom they were endangered. The envoys led him to hope<sup>c</sup> that when he crossed to Syria, he would have the people of Gaza on the side of those of Ptolemais, as well as Zoilus, and they told him further that the Sidonians and many others would join him; being, therefore, full of high hope, he made haste to sail.<sup>d</sup>

The people of Ptolemais appeal to Ptolemy Lathyrus for aid against Alexander Jannaeus.

(3) Meanwhile, however, the people of Ptolemais had been persuaded to change their plans by Demaenetus, who had their confidence at that time and influenced the people; he said that it would be better for them to risk a contest with the Jews, although the outcome was uncertain, than to accept open servitude by delivering themselves up to an absolute ruler, and in addition not only have the present war on their hands, but also a much more serious one arising from Egypt. For Cleopatra would not permit Ptolemy to provide himself with an army from the neighbouring cities but would come against them with a great force, since she was eager to drive her son out of Cyprus too. Moreover, if Ptolemy were disappointed in his expectations, he could again find a refuge in Cyprus, whereas they themselves would be in the greatest danger. Now though Ptolemy Lathyrus sails for Syria.

Ptolemy on the way over learned of the change of mind of the people of Ptolemais, he nevertheless sailed on, and landing at Sycamina,<sup>a</sup> as it is called, there disembarked his force. The army with him, both foot and horse, numbered some thirty thousand in all, and these he led to the neighbourhood of Ptolemais and encamped there; but as they would neither admit his envoys nor listen to his proposals he was in great anxiety.

(4) However when Zoilus and the people of Gaza came to him with the request that he would aid them, as their territory was being ravaged by the Jews under Alexander, Alexander in fear of Ptolemy raised the siege and led his army home again, and thereafter resorted to cunning; for while secretly sending for Cleopatra to attack Ptolemy, he openly proposed a friendly alliance to him, thus acting a part. He also promised to give him four hundred talents of silver, asking him in return to put the local ruler Zoilus out of the way and to assign his territory to the Jews. And so Ptolemy at that time gladly formed a friendship with Alexander, and laid hands<sup>b</sup> on Zoilus. But later, when he heard that Alexander had secretly sent<sup>c</sup> to his mother Cleopatra, he broke the sworn agreements he had made with him, and attacked Ptolemais, and when it refused to admit him, besieged it. with the rest of his army to subdue Judaea. But when Alexander learned of Ptolemy's intention, he also collected an army, consisting of about fifty thousand natives, or eighty thousand, as some writers state, and taking this force went out to meet Ptolemy. Ptolemy, however, made a sudden attack on Asochis,<sup>a</sup> a city of Galilee, on the Sabbath, and taking it by storm, captured about ten thousand persons and a great deal of booty besides.

(5) He also made an attempt on Sepphoris at a little distance from the city which had just been sacked,<sup>b</sup> but lost many of his men, and went on to fight Alexander. Alexander met him in the neighbourhood of the river Jordan, at a place called Asophon,<sup>c</sup> not far from the river Jordan, and pitched his camp close to the enemy. He had, moreover, eight thousand front-line fighters, whom he called "hundred-fighters," carrying long shields covered with bronze. Now Ptolemy's front-line fighters also had round shields covered with bronze, but as his troops were inferior to the enemy in other respects, they were more cautious about risking an engagement. However they were not a little encouraged by the tactician Philostephanus, who told them to cross the river, which was between their camp and the enemy's.<sup>d</sup> And Alexander decided not to prevent their crossing, thinking that he would the more easily take the enemy if they had the river behind them and so were unable to flee. And at first both sides equally performed deeds of prowess and daring, and great was the slaughter in both armies; but as Alexander's men were getting the upper hand, Philostephanus divided his force and skilfully came to the relief of those who were giving ground. And as no one came to aid that part of the Jewish force which was falling back, it had to flee; and not even those near them helped them, but joined in their flight. Ptolemy's men, however, did just the opposite, for they followed the Jews and killed them, until finally, when they were completely routed, they tracked them down to slaughter them until their swords became blunted with killing, and their hands were utterly tired. It was said, in fact, that thirty thousand of them perished—Timagenes<sup>a</sup> says there were fifty thousand—, while as for the rest, some were taken captive, and others escaped to their native places.

(6) After this victory Ptolemy overran<sup>b</sup> other territory, and when evening fell, halted in some villages of Judaea, which he found full of women and infants; he thereupon commanded his soldiers to cut their throats and chop them up and then to fling the pieces

Thereupon Ptolemy<sup>b</sup> left Syria and hastened to Egypt,<sup>c</sup> thinking to get possession of it suddenly while it was left without an army, but he was disappointed of his hope. It was just at this time that Chelkias, one of Cleopatra's two commanders, died in Coele-Syria while in pursuit of Ptolemy.

And when Alexander<sup>d</sup> came to her<sup>e</sup> with gifts and such marks of attention as were to be expected after the harsh treatment he had suffered at the hands of Ptolemy—for he had no other course of safety than this—, some of her friends advised her to take these things and at the same time invade his country and occupy it, and not suffer such an abundance of resources to belong to one man, who was a Jew.<sup>f</sup> Ananias, however, gave the opposite advice, saying that she would commit an injustice if she deprived an ally of his own possessions,<sup>g</sup> “especi-

Apollodotus, the general of the Gazaeans, fell upon the camp of the Jews by night with two thousand mercenaries and ten thousand slaves,<sup>a</sup> and so long as night lasted, the Gazaeans were victorious, for they made the enemy believe<sup>b</sup> that it was Ptolemy who had attacked them; but when day came, and this belief proved false, the Jews, on learning the true state of things, reformed their ranks and attacked the Gazaeans and slew about a thousand<sup>c</sup> of them. The Gazaeans, however, held their ground and did not yield either through lack of supplies or because of the number of their slain—for they were ready to suffer any fate rather than fall into the hands of the enemy—and their courage<sup>d</sup> was heightened by the expectation that Aretas, the king of the Arabs, would come to their assistance.<sup>e</sup> But first, as it happened, Apollodotus was put to death, for his brother Lysimachus, who was envious of his prestige with the people of the city, killed him; he then united<sup>f</sup> the army and delivered the city to Alexander. On first entering, Alexander acted peacefully, but subsequently he loosed his force on the Gazaeans and let his men avenge themselves on them. And so they went off, some in one direction and others in another, killing the Gazaeans. These, however, were by no means mean-spirited, but on the contrary defended themselves

<sup>a</sup> One gets the impression from § 358 that the siege of Gaza began soon after Ptolemy Lathyrus and Cleopatra III withdrew from Palestine, c. 102 B.C. But in § 365 Josephus synchronizes the end of the siege with the murder of Antiochus Grypus which took place in 96 B.C. However the phrase "about this same time" may be a vague indication against the Jews with whatever weapons came to hand and slew as many of them as they themselves had lost. And some of them, being left alone, set fire to their houses in order that nothing might remain in them for the enemy to take out as spoil. Others with their own hands made away with their children and wives, this being the means by which they were compelled to deliver them from slavery to their foes. Of the councilmen there were five hundred in all who took refuge in the temple of Apollo—for the attack had come just when they were sitting in council—but Alexander slew them there, and having pulled the city down upon them, returned to Jerusalem after spending a year on the siege.<sup>a</sup>

(4) About this same time Antiochus, surnamed Grypus, met death as the victim of a plot formed by Heracleon; he was forty-five years of age and reigned twenty-nine.<sup>b</sup> And his son Seleucus,<sup>c</sup> on succeeding to his throne, waged war with his father's brother, who was surnamed Cyzicenus, and after defeating him, captured and killed him.<sup>d</sup> But not long afterward Antiochus,<sup>e</sup> the son of Cyzicenus, who<sup>f</sup> was called Eusebes (the Pious), came to Aradus,<sup>g</sup> and having of time, as elsewhere in Josephus. We may therefore suppose that Gaza was taken nearer 100 B.C. than 96 B.C.

<sup>b</sup> This would make his reign begin 125/4 B.C., the usual reckoning, cf. Schürer i. 176. But Antiochus Grypus began to rule Syria de facto c. 122 B.C., cf. § 272 note a.

put on the diadem, waged war with Seleucus, and after defeating him, drove him <sup>a</sup> out of the whole of Syria. Seleucus thereupon fled to Cilicia, and coming to Mopsuestia, again tried to exact money from its inhabitants. But the people of Mopsuestia were indignant at this, and setting fire to his palace, destroyed him together with his friends.<sup>b</sup> Then while Antiochus,<sup>c</sup> the son of Cyzicenus, was reigning over Syria, Antiochus, the brother of Seleucus, made war on him, but was defeated and perished with his army. And after his death his brother Philip<sup>d</sup> put on the diadem and began to reign over a part of Syria. Thereupon Ptolemy Lathyrus sent for their fourth<sup>e</sup> brother, called Demetrius Akairos<sup>f</sup> (the Ill-timed), from Cnidus and made him king at Damascus. These two brothers were courageously opposed by Antiochus,<sup>g</sup> but he soon died; for he went to the aid of Laodice, queen of the Samenians,<sup>h</sup> who was waging war with the Parthians, and fell fighting bravely.<sup>i</sup> And so Syria was held by the two brothers

Demetrius and Philip, as has been related<sup>a</sup> elsewhere.<sup>b</sup>

(5) <sup>c</sup> As for Alexander, his own people revolted against him—for the nation was aroused against him—at the celebration of the festival,<sup>d</sup> and as he stood beside the altar and was about to sacrifice, they pelted him with citrons, it being a custom among the Jews that at the festival of Tabernacles everyone holds wands made of palm branches and citrons—these we have described elsewhere<sup>e</sup>; and they added insult to injury by saying that he was descended from captives and was unfit to hold office<sup>f</sup> and to sacrifice; and being enraged at this, he killed some six thousand of them, and also placed a wooden barrier about the altar and the temple as far as the coping (of the court) which the priests alone were permitted to enter, and by this means blocked the people's way to him.<sup>g</sup> He also maintained foreign troops of Pisidians and Cilicians, for he could not use Syrians, being at war with them. And after subduing the Arabs of Moab and Galaaditis, whom he forced to pay tribute, he demolished Amathūs, as Theodorus did not venture to meet him in the field.<sup>h</sup> details of §§ 372-373, however, are not found in B.J. For rabbinic parallels to this story and other traditions concerning Alexander Jannaeus see Derenbourg, pp. 96-101.

<sup>g</sup> The allusion to the barrier is puzzling, since such a barrier (called γείσιον or θρυγκός) had been built by Solomon, according to Josephus, Ant. viii. 95, and was presumably found in the second temple, as in Herod's temple, cf. B.J. v. 226.

Then he engaged in battle with Obedas, the king of the Arabs, and falling into an ambush in a rough and difficult region, he was pushed by a multitude of camels into a deep ravine near Garada,<sup>a</sup> a village of Gaulanis,<sup>b</sup> and barely escaped with his own life, and fleeing from there, came to Jerusalem. But when the nation attacked him upon this misfortune, he made war on it and within six years slew no fewer than fifty thousand Jews. And so when he urged them to make an end of their hostility toward him, they only hated him the more on account of what had happened. And when he asked what he ought to do and what they wanted of him,<sup>c</sup> they all cried out, "to die"; and they sent to Demetrius Akairos, asking him to come to their assistance.<sup>d</sup>

(xiv. 1) Thereupon Demetrius came with his army, and taking along those who had summoned him, encamped near the city of Shechem. And Alexander on his side took six thousand two hundred mercenaries and about twenty thousand Jews who favoured his cause, and went out to meet Demetrius, who had three thousand horse and forty thousand foot.<sup>e</sup> Now there was much activity in both camps, the one side attempting to cause Alexander's mercenaries to desert because they were Greeks, while the other made the same appeal to the Jews who were with Demetrius. But as neither side could persuade the other, they engaged in battle, and Demetrius was victorious, while all the mercenaries of Alexander met death after giving proof of their loyalty and courage. Many of Demetrius' soldiers, however, also died.

(2) <sup>a</sup> Alexander thereupon fled to the mountains, where out of pity for him at this reverse six thousand Jews gathered to his side. And at this Demetrius withdrew in alarm.<sup>b</sup> But later on the Jews fought against Alexander and were defeated, many of them dying in battle. The most powerful of them, however, he shut up and besieged in the city of Bethoma,<sup>c</sup> and after taking the city and getting them into his power, he brought them back to Jerusalem; and there he did a thing that was as cruel as could be: while he feasted with his concubines in a conspicuous place, he ordered some eight hundred of the Jews to be crucified, and slaughtered their children and wives before the eyes of the still living wretches. This was the revenge he took for the injuries he had suffered; but the penalty he exacted was inhuman for all that, even though he had, as was natural, gone through very great hardships in the wars he had fought against them, and had finally found himself in danger<sup>d</sup> of losing both his life and his throne, for they were not

But still he seems to have done this thing unnecessarily, <sup>c</sup> and as a result of his excessive cruelty he was nicknamed Thrakidas (the "Cossack") by the Jews. <sup>d</sup> Then his opponents, numbering in all about eight thousand, fled by night and remained in exile so long as Alexander lived. <sup>e</sup> And he, being rid of the trouble they had caused him, reigned thereafter in complete tranquillity.

(3) Now when Demetrius returned from Judaea to Beroea <sup>f</sup> he besieged his brother Philip with ten thousand foot and a thousand horse. and thirst they compelled the men inside with him to surrender. Then they carried off the spoil of the country, and taking Demetrius with them, sent him to Mithridates, who was then reigning over the Parthians,<sup>a</sup> while those captives who happened to be citizens of Antioch they restored without ransom to the Antiochians. But Mithridates, the king of Parthia, held Demetrius in the greatest honour until Demetrius' life came to an end through illness. Philip, however, immediately after the battle marched on Antioch, and after seizing it, became king of Syria.

(xv. 1) Then Antiochus, called Dionysus,<sup>b</sup> who was a brother of Philip and had designs on the throne, came to Damascus, and getting the government of the city into his hands, became king.<sup>c</sup> But when he set out on a campaign against the Arabs, his brother Philip heard of it and marched on Damascus. Thereupon Milesius, who had been left to guard the citadel and <sup>d</sup> the Damascenes, delivered up the city to him; but as he showed himself ungrateful to Milesius and gave him none of the things which Milesius had hoped for when he admitted him, but on the contrary tried to make it seem as if he had taken the city through the fear inspired by him instead of rewarding Milesius as he ought for his services, he became an object of suspicion and was again driven out of Damascus; for once, when he had set out for the hippodrome,

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Ant. xiv. 142. More exactly Chabarsaba (Heb. Kepharsābā, mod. Kefr Saba) lay near Antipatris, cf. Klein, EY 79 and Abel, GP ii. 245; the latter locates Chabarsaba c. 10 miles N.E. of Joppa, and identifies Antipatris with mod. Fejja c. 6 miles further south.

Milesius shut the gates on him and kept Damascus safe for Antiochus. And when Antiochus heard of Philip's experience, he returned from Arabia and at once took the field, marching on Judaea<sup>a</sup> with eight thousand heavy-armed soldiers and eight hundred horse. Thereupon<sup>b</sup> Alexander, who feared an invasion by him, dug a deep trench, beginning at Chabarsaba, which is now called Antipatris,<sup>c</sup> as far as the sea at Joppa, where alone it was possible to attack; and he erected a wall and set up wooden towers and firing-platforms<sup>d</sup> for a distance of a hundred and fifty stades,<sup>e</sup> and then awaited Antiochus's attack. But Antiochus burned all these constructions and so made his army pass through this way to Arabia.<sup>f</sup> At first the Arab king retreated but afterward suddenly appeared with ten thousand horse, and though Antiochus on meeting them fought valiantly, he was killed just as he was gaining the victory and was coming to the aid of part of his army that was in difficulties.<sup>g</sup> And when Antiochus fell, his army fled to the village of Kana,<sup>h</sup> where the greatest part of it perished of hunger.

And when the queen saw that he was on the point of death and no longer held<sup>b</sup> to any hope of recovery, she wept and beat her breast, lamenting the bereavement that was about to befall her and her children, and said to him, "To whom are you thus leaving me and your children, who are in need of help from others, especially when you know how hostile the nation feels toward you!" Thereupon he advised her to follow his suggestions for keeping the throne secure for herself and her children and to conceal his death from the soldiers until she had captured the fortress. And then, he said, on her return to Jerusalem as from a splendid victory, she should yield a certain amount of power to the Pharisees, for if they praised her in return for this sign of regard, they would dispose the nation favourably toward her.<sup>c</sup> These men, he assured her, had so much influence with their fellow-Jews that they could injure those whom they hated and help those to whom they were friendly; for they had the complete confidence of the masses when they spoke harshly of any person, even when they did so out of envy; and he himself, he added, had come into conflict with the nation because these men had been badly treated by him. <sup>2</sup> The contrast between τὸ δραστήριον and τὸ ἄπραγμον is Thucydidean (Thuc. ii. 63. 2), and occurs again in Ant. xiv. 13; τὸ δραστήριον alone occurs in B.J. i. 283 and elsewhere.

power to Alexandra. Of these sons the one, Hyrcanus, was incompetent to govern and in addition much preferred a quiet life, while the younger, Aristobulus, was a man of action<sup>a</sup> and high spirit. As for the queen herself, she was loved by the masses because she was thought to disapprove of the crimes committed by her husband.

(2) Alexandra then appointed Hyrcanus as high priest because of his greater age but more especially because of his lack of energy<sup>a</sup>; and she permitted the Pharisees to do as they liked in all matters, and also commanded the people to obey them; and whatever regulations, introduced by the Pharisees in accordance with the tradition of their fathers, had been abolished by her father-in-law Hyrcanus, these she again restored.<sup>b</sup> And so, while she had the title of sovereign, the Pharisees had the power. For example, they recalled exiles, and freed prisoners, and, in a word, in no way differed from absolute rulers. Nevertheless the queen took thought for the welfare of the kingdom and recruited a large force of mercenaries and also made her own force twice as large, with the result that she struck terror into the local rulers round her and received hostages from them. And throughout the entire country there was quiet except for the Pharisees; for they worked upon the feelings of the queen and tried to persuade her to kill those who had urged Alexander to put the eight hundred to death.<sup>c</sup> Later they themselves cut down<sup>d</sup> leading citizens came to the palace, Aristobulus among them—for he was obviously resentful of what was taking place, and let it be plainly seen that if only he should get the opportunity, he would not leave his mother any power at all—, and they reminded her of all that they had achieved in the face of danger, whereby they had shown their unwavering<sup>a</sup> loyalty to their master<sup>b</sup> and had therefore been judged worthy by him of the greatest honours. And they begged her not to crush their hopes completely,<sup>c</sup> for, they said, after escaping the dangers of war, they were now being slaughtered at home like cattle by their foes, and there was no one to avenge them. They also said<sup>d</sup> that if their adversaries were to be contented with those already slain, they would bear with equanimity what had taken place, out of genuine devotion to their masters ; but if, on the other hand, these men were to continue in the same course, let them, they begged, at least be given their freedom ; for they would never bring themselves to seek any means of safety but what should come from her, and would welcome death in her palace so long as they might not have disloyalty on their conscience.<sup>e</sup> It would be disgraceful both for them and for her who ruled as queen, they added, if, being abandoned by her, they should be given shelter by the enemies of her husband ; for Aretas the Arab and the other princes would consider it of the utmost value to

But if this could not be, and she had determined to favour the Pharisees above all others, let her, as the next best thing, station each of them in one of the garrisons, for, if some evil genius were thus wroth with the house of Alexander, they at least would show themselves (loyal) <sup>a</sup> even though living in humble circumstances.

(3) Speaking in this vein at great length, they called upon the shades of Alexander to take pity on those who had been killed and those who were in danger, whereupon all the bystanders burst into tears. And Aristobulus in particular made plain his sentiments by denouncing his mother bitterly. But still they themselves were to blame for their misfortunes, in allowing a woman to reign who madly desired it in her unreasonable love of power, and when her sons were in the prime of life. And so the queen, not knowing what to do consistent with her dignity, entrusted to them the guarding of the fortresses with the exception of Hyrcania,<sup>b</sup> Alexandreion<sup>c</sup> and Machaerus,<sup>d</sup> where her most valuable possessions were. (4) About this time news came that Tigranes, king of Armenia,<sup>b</sup> with an army of three hundred thousand<sup>c</sup> men had invaded Syria and was coming against Judaea.<sup>d</sup> This naturally frightened the queen and her people. And so they sent many valuable gifts and envoys to him as he was besieging Ptolemais. For Queen Selene, also called Cleopatra,<sup>e</sup> was then ruling over Syria and she induced the inhabitants to shut their gates against Tigranes. The envoys therefore met with him and asked him to grant favourable terms to the queen and her people. Thereupon he commended them for coming so great a distance to do homage to him, and gave them reason to hope for the best. But hardly had Ptolemais been captured when news came to Tigranes that Lucullus,<sup>f</sup> who was pursuing Mithridates,<sup>g</sup> had failed to catch him, as he had fled to the Iberians,<sup>h</sup> and had therefore ravaged

<sup>a</sup> In the Gr. there is no object for the verb "was besieging," which can hardly be taken to govern the preceding noun "Armenia." As the text stands, the city of Tigranocerta must be meant, even if we do not adopt Niese's conjecture, reading "Tigranocerta" for "and Tigranes" in the following sentence. For this siege see H. A. Ormerod in CAH ix. 365-367.

Armenia and was besieging (the capital).<sup>a</sup> And when Tigranes learned of this, he withdrew to his own country.

(5) <sup>b</sup> Some time after this the queen was stricken by a serious illness, whereupon Aristobulus decided to make an attempt to seize power, and slipped away by night with one of his servants, and went to the fortresses where his father's friends had been stationed. For while he had long resented the things his mother was doing, he was just then especially fearful that on her death their whole family might come under the rule of the Pharisees, for he saw the incapacity of his brother, who was destined to succeed to the throne. The only one informed of his deed was his wife, whom he had left in the city with their children.<sup>c</sup> And he first came to Agaba,<sup>d</sup> where he found Palaestes,<sup>e</sup> one of the leading men, and was given shelter by him. Now on the next day the queen became aware of Aristobulus' flight, and for a time she believed that his departure was not for the purpose of beginning a revolt. But when successive messengers came to report that he had captured the first fortress, and after that the second, and after that all of them—for when once the first had made a beginning they all hastened to submit to his will—, then at last both the queen and her people were in the greatest dismay. For they knew that Aristobulus was not far from being able to seize the throne for himself, and they were very much afraid that he might exact satisfaction for the excesses which they had practised on his house. They therefore decided to place his wife and children in the fortress overlooking the temple.<sup>a</sup> And Aristobulus received such large contributions from many sources<sup>b</sup> that there was already a veritable royal train about him. For in barely fifteen days he had occupied twenty-two fortresses, and obtaining resources from these, he gathered an army from Lebanon, Trachonitis and the local princes. These men readily submitted to him, being drawn to the stronger side, and at the same time believing that if they aided Aristobulus they could exploit his kingdom no less than those who were closely related to him,<sup>c</sup> on the ground that they had been the means of his conquering it. Meanwhile the elders of the Jews and Hyrcanus went to the queen and begged her to give them some counsel about the present situation. For, they said, Aristobulus was already master of almost the entire country by virtue of having occupied so many fortresses; but it was not their place, however seriously ill she might be, to make plans by themselves while she was still alive; and yet the danger was not at all far off.<sup>d</sup> Thereupon she told them to do whatever they thought expedient,

BOOK XIV

(i. 1) HAVING related the history of Queen Alexandra and her death in the preceding book, we shall now speak of the events that followed immediately thereafter, keeping in mind one thing above all else, which is not to omit anything whether through ignorance or fault of memory. For while the relation and recording of events that are unknown to most people because of their antiquity require charm of exposition, such as is imparted by the choice of words and their proper arrangement and by whatever else contributes elegance to the narrative, in order that readers may receive such information with a certain degree of gratification and pleasure, nevertheless what historians should make their chief aim is to be accurate and hold everything else of less importance than speaking <sup>a</sup> the truth to those who must rely upon them in matters of which they themselves have no knowledge.<sup>b</sup> with Book XIV Josephus begins to use Nicolas of Damascus as his chief source (continuing to Ant. xvii. 206), but it should be noted that Josephus has freely drawn on Nicolas in the preceding book as well, as some of the notes indicate; see also the Appendix on sources in the last volume of this translation. The reader may also be referred to the detailed but often speculative study of the parallelism between Ant. xiv. and B.J. i. by R. Laqueur in Der jüdische Historiker Flavius Josephus, 1920, pp. 128-221.

<sup>b</sup> Variant "the high priesthood." The reading "royal power" (βασιλείαν) is supported by B.J. i. 120 and other passages, referred to in the following notes.

<sup>c</sup> The Olympiad and consular years correspond to 70-69 B.C.; thus Hyrcanus would have assumed royal power two years before the death of Alexandra, if she died in 67 B.C., as is most probable. Moreover we are told in Ant. xiv. 97 and xx. 244 that Aristobulus reigned 3 years and 450

(2) <sup>a</sup> Now when Hyrcanus assumed royal power, <sup>b</sup> in the third year of the hundred and seventy-seventh Olympiad, the Roman consuls being Quintus Hortensius and Quintus Metellus, the same who was surnamed Creticus, <sup>c</sup> Aristobulus promptly declared war on him, and in the battle which he fought near Jericho many of the soldiers of Hyrcanus deserted to his brother. Upon this he fled to the citadel, where Aristobulus' wife and children had been confined by his mother, as we have said before. <sup>d</sup> And those of the opposite faction who had taken refuge in the precincts of the temple he attacked and seized. <sup>e</sup> And after proposing to his brother that they come to an agreement, he ended hostilities on the terms that Aristobulus should be king, while he himself should live without taking part in public affairs, and be undisturbed in the enjoyment of the possessions that he then had. <sup>f</sup> This pact they made under the auspices 6 months, and in Ant. xv. 180 that after Alexandra's death Hyrcanus was king 3 months; this makes a total of 3 years and 9 months for the two reigns; reckoning back from 63 B.C., when Pompey ended Aristobulus's reign, we arrive at 67 B.C. for the accession of Hyrcanus. Schürer, i. 256 n. 1, is probably right in assuming that Josephus has here relied on a chronological hand-book and has given a date inconsistent with native tradition. <sup>d</sup> Ant. xiii. 426.

Hyrcanus II and Aristobulus II make an agreement whereby Aristobulus becomes king.

<sup>f</sup> Josephus here and in the parallel, B.J. i. 121, does not make it clear whether Hyrcanus gave up the high priesthood as well as the throne to Aristobulus, though the language in both passages (especially Ant. xiv. 7) suggests that he did. However, in Ant. xiv. 41, 97 and xx. 243-244 Josephus says plainly that Aristobulus became high priest in place of Hyrcanus. There is therefore no reason to assume, as some scholars do, that Hyrcanus continued as high priest between 67 and 63 B.C. See further A. Schalit, BJPOS 6 (1939), 145-148.

<sup>a</sup> Laqueur, pp. 134-136, pointing out that Ant. gives Hyrcanus a less important position than B.J. (which says that "Hyrcanus, while abdicating the throne, should enjoy all his other honours as the king's brother"), attributes this slight difference, as similar ones, to Josephus' altered attitude toward the Herodians, whose ancestor Antipater was responsible for Hyrcanus' later triumph over Aristobulus.

<sup>b</sup> Justin Martyr, Dial. c. Tryph. 52, says that Antipater was an Ascalonite; Julius Africanus, ap. Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. i. 7. 11, says that Antipater's father Herod was a temple-slave of Apollo at Ascalon and that Antipater was of the temple, and after confirming their agreement by oaths and pledges and embracing one another in the sight of all the people, they withdrew. Aristobulus to the palace, and Hyrcanus, as one who was now a private citizen,<sup>a</sup> to the house of Aristobulus.

(3) But there was a certain friend of Hyrcanus, an Idumaeen called Antipater, who, having a large fortune and being by nature a man of action and a trouble-maker, was unfriendly to Aristobulus and quarrelled with him because of his friendliness toward Hyrcanus. Nicolas of Damascus, to be sure, says that his family belonged to the leading Jews who came to Judaea from Babylon.<sup>b</sup> But he says this in order to please Antipater's son Herod, who became king of the Jews by a certain turn of fortune, as we shall relate in the proper place.<sup>c</sup> This Antipater, it seems, was first called Antipas, which was also the name of his father,<sup>d</sup> whom King Alexander<sup>e</sup> and his wife appointed governor of the whole of Idumaea, and they say that he made friends of the neighbouring carried off by Idumaeen robbers as a boy; see further next note.

Arabs and Gazaeans and Ascalonites, and completely won them over by many large gifts. Now the younger Antipater looked jealously on Aristobulus' power,<sup>a</sup> and fearing that he might suffer harm because of his hatred for him, he stirred up the powerful<sup>a</sup> Jews against him in secret conversations, saying that it was wrong to ignore the fact that Aristobulus wrongly held royal power and had driven his brother from the throne although he was the elder, and now occupied it though it belonged to the other by right of seniority. These were the arguments he unceasingly continued to address to Hyrcanus, adding that he was in danger of losing his life unless he insured his safety by taking himself out of his way.<sup>b</sup> For Aristobulus' friends, he said, were losing no opportunity of advising him to do away with Hyrcanus, as he would then hold power securely. But Hyrcanus gave no credence to these words, for he was naturally a decent man and because of his kindliness did not readily listen to slander. But his ineffectualness<sup>c</sup> and weakness of will made him seem ignoble and unmanly to those who observed him. Aristobulus, however, was of the opposite nature, being a man of action<sup>c</sup> and alert spirit.

(4) <sup>d</sup> And so when Antipater saw that Hyrcanus was paying no attention to what he said, he did not let a day go by without bringing false charges against Aristobulus before him, and slandering him by saying that he wished to kill Hyrcanus; and by dint of constant pressure he persuaded him to take his advice and flee to Aretas,<sup>a</sup> the Arab king, promising that if he followed his advice, he too would be his ally. When Hyrcanus heard that this would be to his advantage, he was ready to flee to Aretas, for Arabia borders on Judaea.<sup>b</sup> However, he first sent Antipater to the Arab king to receive sworn assurances that if he came to him as a suppliant, Aretas would not deliver him up to his enemies. When Antipater had received these sworn assurances, he returned to Hyrcanus at Jerusalem; and not long afterward he slipped out of the city by night, taking Hyrcanus with him, and after travelling a great distance,<sup>c</sup> brought him to the city called Petra, where the palace of Aretas was. Being a very good friend of the king, he urged him to bring Hyrcanus back to Judaea; and as he did this every day without intermission and offered him gifts in addition, he finally persuaded Aretas.<sup>d</sup> Moreover Hyrcanus also promised him that if he were restored and received his throne, he would return to him the territory and the twelve cities which his father Alexander had taken from the Arabs.<sup>e</sup> These were Medaba,<sup>f</sup> Libba,<sup>g</sup> Dabaloth,<sup>h</sup> Ara-

<sup>c</sup> Petra is more than a hundred miles from Jerusalem as the crow flies. For a convenient account of the Hellenistic

(ii. 1) Because of these promises which were made to him, Aretas marched against Aristobulus with an army of fifty thousand horsemen and footsoldiers as well,<sup>j</sup> and defeated him in battle. After his victory many deserted to Hyrcanus, and Aristobulus, being left alone, fled to Jerusalem. Thereupon the Arab king took his whole army and attacked the temple, where he besieged Aristobulus; and the citizens, joining Hyrcanus' side, assisted him in the siege, while only the priests remained loyal to Aristobulus. And so Aretas placed the camps of the Arabs and Jews<sup>k</sup> next to one another, and pressed the siege vigorously. But as this action took place at the time of observing the festival of Unleavened Bread, which we call Phaska,<sup>l</sup> the Jews of best repute left the country and fled to Egypt. had once in a rainless period prayed to God to end the drought, and God had heard his prayer and sent rain: this man hid himself when he saw that the civil war continued to rage, but he was taken to the camp of the Jews and was asked to place a curse on Aristobulus and his fellow-rebels, just as he had, by his prayers, put an end to the rainless period. But when in spite of his refusals and excuses he was forced to speak by the mob, he stood up in their midst and said, "O God, king of the universe, since these men standing beside me are Thy people, and those who are besieged are Thy priests, I beseech Thee not to hearken to them against these men nor to bring to pass what these men ask Thee to do to those others." And when he had prayed in this manner the villains among the Jews who stood round him stoned him to death.

(2) But God straightway punished them for this savagery, and exacted satisfaction for the murder of Onias in the following manner. While the priests and Aristobulus were being besieged, there happened to come round the festival called Phaska, at which it is our custom to offer numerous sacrifices to God.<sup>a</sup> But as Aristobulus and those with him lacked victims, they asked their countrymen to furnish them with these, and take as much money for the victims as they wished. And when these others demanded that they pay a thousand drachmas for each animal they wished to get, Aristobulus and the priests willingly accepted this price and gave them the money, which they let down from the walls by a rope. countrymen, however, after receiving the money did not deliver the victims, but went to such lengths of villainy that they violated their pledges and acted impiously toward God by not furnishing the sacrificial victims to those who were in need of them.<sup>a</sup> But the priests, on suffering this breach of faith, prayed to God to exact satisfaction on their behalf from their countrymen; and He did not delay their punishment, but sent a mighty and violent wind to destroy the crops of the entire country,<sup>b</sup> so that people at that time had to pay eleven drachmas for a modius of wheat.<sup>c</sup>

(3) <sup>d</sup> Meanwhile Pompey sent Scaurus also <sup>e</sup> to Syria, as he himself was in Armenia, still making war on Tigranes.<sup>f</sup> And when Scaurus came to Damascus, he found that Lollius and Metellus had just taken the city, and so he hurried on to Judaea. On his arrival envoys came to him from both Aristobulus and Hyrcanus, each of whom asked him to come to his aid. Aristobulus offered to give him four hundred <sup>g</sup> talents; and though Hyrcanus promised him no less a sum, he accepted the offer of Aristobulus, for he was both wealthy and generous and asked for more moderate terms, whereas Hyrcanus was poor and niggardly and held out untrustworthy promises for greater concessions.<sup>a</sup> Nor was it as easy to take by force a city which was among the most strongly fortified and powerful, as to drive out some fugitives together with the host of Nabataeans, who were not well fitted for warfare. And so he took Aristobulus' side for the reasons mentioned above, and accepting the money, put an end to the siege by commanding Aretas to withdraw or else be declared an enemy of the Romans. Then Seaurus again withdrew to Damascus, while Aristobulus with a large force marched against Aretas and Hyrcanus, and on engaging them at a place called Papyron,<sup>b</sup> defeated them in battle and killed some six thousand of the enemy, among the fallen being Phallion,<sup>c</sup> the brother of Antipater.

<sup>a</sup> B.J. i. 128 has “Three hundred talents offered by Aristobulus outweighed considerations of justice.” Laqueur, pp. 143-145, attributes the more favourable attitude toward Aristobulus and the criticism of Hyrcanus in Ant. to Josephus' later anti-Herodian bias.

(iii. 1) When Pompey not long afterward came to Damascus and was advancing into Coele-Syria,<sup>d</sup> there came to him envoys from all of Syria and Egypt and Judaea. Aristobulus, for example, sent him a fine gift, which was a golden vine worth five hundred talents. This gift is also mentioned by Strabo of Cappadocia in the following words. "There also came from Egypt an embassy and a crown worth four thousand pieces of gold, and from Judaea

<sup>a</sup> From the description of the object as a vine or garden it may be conjectured that its Heb. name was ʿeden = “delight.”

<sup>b</sup> Does the citation from Strabo end with the preceding sentence, as Naber assumes, or continue to the words “five hundred talents,” as Niese assumes, or further, to the words “ruler of the Jews,” as Reinach and, apparently, Schürer assume? On this depends the answer to the problem who is meant by “we ourselves.” Schürer, i. 295 n. 12, points out that if Josephus were here writing in the first person he would have mentioned the burning of the temple of Jupiter in A.D. 69. Reinach, moreover, argues that the phrase τὸν Ἰουδαίων δυνάστην, “ruler of the Jews,” is not in the style of either Josephus or Nicolas. Though this is not either a vine or garden; terpōlē (delight)<sup>a</sup> is what they called this work of art. Moreover we ourselves<sup>b</sup> have examined this gift, which has been set up in the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus at Rome, and has an inscription reading, 'From Alexander,<sup>c</sup> the king of the Jews.' It was valued at five hundred talents. And it is said to have been sent by Aristobulus, the ruler of the Jews."

(2) And not long afterward<sup>d</sup> envoys again came to him, Antipater on behalf of Hyrcanus, and Nicodemus<sup>e</sup> on behalf of Aristobulus: the latter, indeed, also accused Gabinius<sup>f</sup> and Seaurus of taking money from him, Gabinius first getting three hundred talents, and Seaurus later four hundred talents: and so Aristobulus made these men his enemies in addition to the others he had. Pompey thereupon told the disputants to come to him,<sup>g</sup> and at the beginning of spring, took his force from their winter quarters, and set out for the region of Damascus.

certain, so far as Nicolas is concerned, it must be admitted that it is more in the style of Strabo. For these reasons I also have assumed that "we ourselves" means Strabo.

<sup>c</sup> The Epitome has "Aristobulus," Lat. has "Aristobulus, son of Alexander": these are probably scribal corrections. It is quite possible that Aristobulus presented a gift with the name of his father Alexander (Jannaeus) inscribed on it, the gift having originally been meant for presentation by Alexander. One may also render the Gr. here, "having an inscription of Alexander, the king of the Jews," i.e. Alexander's name may not have appeared as that of the donor. See Reinach, Textes, p. 93 n. 3.

He also destroyed the fortress of Lysias,<sup>d</sup> of which the Jew Silas was lord. And passing the cities of Heliopolis and Chalcis, he crossed the mountain that divides the region called Coele-Syria from the rest of Syria,<sup>e</sup> and came to Damascus. Here he heard the case of the Jews and their leaders, Hyrcanus and Aristobulus, who were quarrelling with one another, while the nation was against them both and asked not to be ruled by a king, saying that it was the custom of their country to obey the priests of the God who was venerated by them, but that these two, who were descended from the priests, were seeking to change their form of government in order that they might become a nation of slaves. He also denounced him as the one who had instigated the raids against neighbouring peoples and the acts of piracy at sea,<sup>b</sup> and added that the nation would not have rebelled against him if he had not been a man given to violence and disorder. In making these accusations he was supported by more than a thousand of the most reputable Jews, whom Antipater had provided for that purpose. Aristobulus, on the other hand, blamed Hyrcanus' fall from power on his own character, which was ineffectual and therefore invited contempt; as for himself, he said that he had of necessity taken over the royal power for fear<sup>c</sup> that it might pass into the hands of others, and that his title was exactly the same as that of his father Alexander. He then called, as witnesses to these statements, some young swaggerers, who offensively displayed their purple robes, long hair, metal ornaments and other finery, which they wore as if they were marching in a festive procession instead of pleading their cause.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Conjectured from B.J. (Διοσπόλεως) for ms. Deilum or Delium. On the site of Dium cf. Int. xiii. 393 note c. Some scholars take B.J. i. 132 to mean that Pompey led Aristobulus from Damascus to Dium before the latter set out for Judaea. But this is a doubtful interpretation.

then he told them to keep the peace ; at the same time he treated Aristobulus with deference for fear that he might incite the country to rebellion and block his passage through it. This, however, was, as it happened, the very thing which Aristobulus did, for without waiting for any of the things to be done of which Pompey had spoken to him, he came to the city of Dium,<sup>a</sup> and from there set out for Judaea.

(4) <sup>b</sup> But Pompey, who was angered by this action, took the army that he had prepared against the Nabataeans, and the auxiliaries from Damascus and the rest of Syria, as well as the Roman legions already at his disposal, and marched against Aristobulus. After passing through Pella and Seythopolis, he came to Coreae,<sup>c</sup> which is the beginning of Judaea as one goes through the interior, and from there sent to Aristobulus, who had taken refuge in Alexandreion,<sup>d</sup> a very beautiful<sup>e</sup> stronghold situated on the top of a mountain, and commanded him to come to him. Thereupon Aristobulus, whom many of his men urged not to make war on the Romans,<sup>f</sup> came down and after arguing with his brother about his right to the throne, again went up to the citadel with Pompey's consent ; and this he did two or three times, for on the one hand he cherished the hope <sup>a</sup> that he would obtain the kingdom from Pompey, and so feigned obedience to everything he commanded, and on the other hand, he retired to the stronghold <sup>b</sup> in order not to weaken his force and to prepare for himself supplies for making war, as he feared that Pompey might transfer <sup>c</sup> the royal power to Hyrcanus. Pompey, however, commanded him to deliver up his strongholds and give the orders therefor to his garrison commanders in his own handwriting—for they had been forbidden to accept orders in any other form,—and so he obeyed, but retired resentfully to Jerusalem and set about preparing for war. And not long afterward Pompey led his army against him; and on the way there came to him messengers from Pontus, who informed him of the death of Mithridates at the hands of his son Pharnaces.<sup>d</sup>

(iv. 1) He then encamped near Jericho,<sup>e</sup> where they cultivate the palm tree and opobalsamum, that most excellent of ointments, which, when the shrubs are cut with a sharp stone, oozes out like sap, and at dawn set out for Jerusalem.<sup>f</sup> And Aristobulus, thinking better of his plan,<sup>g</sup> came to Pompey and promising to give him money and admit him into Jerusalem, begged him to stop the war and do as he liked peaceably. On his making this request Pompey pardoned him and sent Gabinius and some soldiers to get the money and take over the city. None of these promises was carried out, however, and Gabinius returned after being shut out of the city and failing to receive the money; for Aristobulus' soldiers<sup>a</sup> had not permitted the agreement to be carried out. And<sup>b</sup> Pompey, being seized with anger at this, placed Aristobulus under arrest, and himself went to the city, which was strongly fortified on all sides except on the north, where it was weak. For it is surrounded by a broad and deep ravine which takes in the temple, and this is very strongly protected by an encircling wall of stone.<sup>c</sup>

(2) But among the men within the city there was dissension, for they were not of one mind concerning their situation; to some it seemed best to deliver the city to Pompey, while those who sympathized with Aristobulus urged that they shut Pompey out and make war on him because he held Aristobulus prisoner. It was this party that made the first move and occupied the temple, and cutting the bridge that stretches from it to the city,<sup>d</sup> prepared themselves for a siege. But those of the other faction admitted Pompey's army and handed over to him the city and the palace. Pompey thereupon sent his legate Piso with an army to guard the city and the palace,<sup>e</sup> and fortified the houses adjoining the temple and the places round the temple outside. His first step was to offer conciliatory terms <sup>a</sup> to those within, but as they would not listen to his proposals, he fortified the surrounding places with walls, with Hyrcanus willingly assisting him in all ways. And at dawn <sup>b</sup> Pompey pitched his camp on the north <sup>c</sup> side of the temple, where it was open to attack. But even here stood great towers, <sup>d</sup> and a trench had been dug, and the temple was surrounded by a deep ravine; for there was a steep slope on the side toward the city after the bridge was destroyed, and at this spot Pompey by great labour day by day had caused earthworks to be raised, for which the Romans cut down the timber round about. And when these were high enough, though the trench was filled up with difficulty because of its immense depth, he moved up and set in place the siege engines and instruments of war that had been brought from Tyre, and began to batter the temple with his catapults. But if it were not our national custom to rest on the Sabbath day, the earthworks would not have been finished, because the Jews would have prevented this; for the Law permits us to defend ourselves against those who begin a battle and strike us, but it does not allow us to fight against an enemy that does anything else. <sup>e</sup>

<sup>b</sup> Not the third month of the Jewish year (roughly June) but the third month of the siege, as we are told in B.J. i. 149; see next note.

<sup>c</sup> The 179th Olympiad (first year) extended from July 64 to July 63 B.C.; the consulship of Antonius and Cicero was in 63 B.C.; the combination of the two dates gives us the first half of 63 B.C. for the capture of the city. This date cannot be harmonized with the mention of the Fast Day, if by this Josephus means the Day of Atonement, which falls on the 10th of Tishri (roughly October). A plausible ex-not shoot at the Jews or meet them in hand to hand combat, but instead they raised earthworks and towers, and brought up their siege-engines in order that these might be put to work the following day. And one may get an idea of the extreme piety which we show toward God and of our strict observance of the laws from the fact that during the siege the priests were not hindered from performing any of the sacred ceremonies through fear, but twice a day, in the morning and at the ninth hour,<sup>a</sup> they performed the sacred ceremonies at the altar, and did not omit any of the sacrifices even when some difficulty arose because of the attacks. And indeed when the city was taken, in the third month,<sup>b</sup> on the Fast Day, in the hundred and seventy-ninth Olympiad, in the consulship of Gaius Antonius and Marcus Tullius Cicero,<sup>c</sup> and the enemy rushed in and were slaughtering the Jews in the temple, those who were busied with the sacrifices none the less continued to perform the sacred ceremonies: nor were they compelled, either by fear for their lives or by the great number of those already slain, to run away, but thought it better to endure whatever they might have to suffer there beside the altars than to neglect any of the planation of the difficulty was given long ago by Herzfeld (cited by Schürer i. 298 n. 23 and Reinach). Josephus is here supplementing Nicolas' account from those of Strabo and other historians, who, like many pagan writers, erroneously referred to the Sabbath as a fast day: cf. Strabo xvi. 763, who says Pompey took Jerusalem "on a fast day, they say, when the Jews refrain from all work," and Dio Cassius xxvii. 16, who says that the city was taken "on the day of Kronos" (= the Sabbath). The city probably fell about July 63 B.C. if, as Josephus (or Nicolas) says, the siege lasted three months, since Pompey apparently started operations in the spring of 63 B.C. (cf. § 53 note d).

(4) Now when the siege-engine was brought up, the largest of the towers was shaken and fell, making a breach through which the enemy poured in; first among them was Cornelius Faustus, the son of Sulla, who with his soldiers mounted the wall, and after him the centurion Furius, with those who followed him, on the other side, and between them Fabius, another centurion, with a strong and compact body of men. And there was slaughter everywhere. For some of the Jews were slain by the Romans, and others by their fellows<sup>a</sup>; and there were some who hurled themselves down the precipices,<sup>b</sup> and setting fire to their houses, burned themselves within them, for they could not bear to accept their fate. And so of the Jews there fell some twelve thousand,<sup>c</sup> but of the Romans only a very few.<sup>d</sup> One of those taken captive was Absalom, the uncle and at the same time father-in-law of Aristobulus.<sup>e</sup> And not light was the sin committed against the sanctuary,<sup>f</sup> which before that time had never been entered or seen. <sup>a</sup> Cf. Ant. xiii. 356, where its capture, but not its destruction, is mentioned.

<sup>c</sup> Arethusa, not mentioned previously in Ant., should be a city on the coast, to judge from its position in the list, and is therefore presumably to be distinguished from the Arethusa (mod. Restān) in northern Syria, near Emesa (Homs).

and the entire nation, which before had raised itself so high, he confined within its own borders. He also rebuilt Gadara,<sup>a</sup> which had been demolished a little while before, to please Demetrius the Gadarene, his freedman; and the other cities, Hippus, Scythopolis, Pella, Dium,<sup>b</sup> Samaria, as well as Marisa, Azotus, Jamneia and Arethusa,<sup>c</sup> he restored to their own inhabitants.<sup>d</sup> And not only these cities in the interior, in addition to those that had been demolished, but also the coast cities of Gaza, Joppa, Dora and Straton's Tower—this last city, which Herod refounded magnificently and adorned with harbours and temples, was later renamed Caesarea<sup>e</sup>—all these Pompey set free and annexed them to the province.<sup>f</sup>

(5) <sup>g</sup> For this misfortune which befell Jerusalem<sup>h</sup> Hyrcanus and Aristobulus were responsible, because of their dissension. For we lost our freedom and became subject to the Romans, and the territory which we had gained by our arms and taken from the Syrians we were compelled to give back to them, and in addition the Romans exacted of us in a short space of time more than ten thousand talents; and the royal power which had formerly been bestowed came surety for three hundred talents.<sup>a</sup> And on these terms Seaurus ended the war, being no less eager to have this come about than was Aretas.

<sup>b</sup> Gabinius had been consul in 58 B.C. and came to Syria as proconsul in 57 B.C. In B.J. i. 160 Josephus says that he came as successor to Scaurus, overlooking the two intervening governors, cf. Dr. Thackeray's note ad loc. On Gabinius' extortions from the provincials see Dio Cassius xxxix. 55-56 and Cicero, Pro Sestio 43.

(2) But some time later, while Alexander, the son of Aristobulus, was overrunning Judaea, Gabinius came to Syria from Rome as governor,<sup>b</sup> and after achieving many other things worthy of note, also marched against Alexander; for Hyrcanus was no longer able to hold out against the strength of Alexander, who was actually attempting to raise again the wall of Jerusalem which Pompey had destroyed. But this he was stopped from doing by the Romans there.<sup>c</sup> He then went round the country and armed many of the Jews, and soon collected ten thousand heavy-armed soldiers and fifteen hundred horse, and fortified the strongholds of Alexandreion near Coreae and Machaerūs<sup>d</sup> near the mountains of Arabia.<sup>e</sup> Gabinius therefore went out against him, sending ahead Mark Antony with some other officers. These armed the Romans who accompanied them,<sup>f</sup> and beside them the Jews who were submissive, led by Peitholaus and Malichus, and taking along

<sup>a</sup> Schalit, p. 35, suggests that these Romans were negotiatores or business agents who had come to exploit Judaea's farms and industries.

<sup>d</sup> On these two fortresses see Ant. xiii. 417 notes c and d. Aristobulus had earlier yielded them to Pompey, cf. §§ 50-52. Presumably Alexander now refortified them.

<sup>e</sup> Ant. omits the fortress of Hyrcania, mentioned in B.J. i. 161 (on its location see Ant. xiii. 417 note b). Laqueur, p. 217, explains its omission here by supposing that Josephus was ignorant of its location. This seems doubtful, particularly because of its being mentioned together with the other two fortresses below, in § 89.

Antipater's guard<sup>a</sup> also, went to meet Alexander. Gabinius himself followed them with his main body. Alexander therefore retired to the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, where the two forces fell upon each other and a battle took place, in which the Romans killed about three thousand of the enemy, and captured as many alive.<sup>b</sup>

(3) Meanwhile Gabinius came to Alexandreion and invited those within to cease hostilities,<sup>c</sup> agreeing to pardon them for their past offences. But as many of the enemy were encamped before the stronghold, the Romans set upon them; and Mark Antony, who fought with distinction<sup>d</sup> and killed many men, was voted the prize for bravery. Finally Gabinius left a part of his army there until the fortress should be taken by siege, and himself went through the rest of Judaea, and whenever he came upon a ruined city, he gave directions for it to be rebuilt. And so there were rebuilt Samaria, Azotus, Scythopolis, Anthedon, Raphia, Adora, Marisa, Gaza and not a few others.<sup>e</sup> And as the people obeyed Gabinius' orders, these cities, which had long been desolate, could now be safely inhabited.<sup>f</sup>

(4) Having taken these measures throughout the country, Gabinius returned to Alexandreion, and as

<sup>c</sup> On these terms and the nature of Gabinius' administrative measures in Judaea see works cited in Appendix I.

<sup>d</sup> So also B.J., but with the majority of scholars we must correct "Gadara" to "Gazara" (in N.W. Judaea); cf.

he pressed the siege strongly, Alexander sent envoys to him, asking pardon for his offences and giving up the strongholds of Hyrcania and Machaerūs, and afterwards Alexandreion as well. And so Gabinius demolished them.<sup>a</sup> For Alexander's mother, who was on the side of the Romans, since her husband and her other children were held at Rome, came to him with the request that he do this, and he granted it; and after settling matters with her, he brought Hyrcanus to Jerusalem, to have charge of the temple. He also set up five councils (synhedria),<sup>b</sup> and divided the nation into as many districts<sup>c</sup>; these centres of government were: first, Jerusalem, next, Gadara,<sup>d</sup> third, Amathūs,<sup>e</sup> fourth, Jericho, and fifth, Sepphoris in Galilee.<sup>f</sup> And so the people were removed from monarchic rule and lived under an aristocracy.<sup>g</sup>

Schürer i. 339 n. 5, whose historical argument is sound, although his explanation of "Gadara" as an Aramaized form of "Gazara" is philologically questionable, since d in Aramaic corresponds to z in Heb. only when the latter = proto-Semitic ḏ (but cf. W. F. Albright, From the Stone Age to Christianity, p. 336 n. 10. It may be that Josephus or a scribe wrote "Gadara" for "Gazara" because the former city lay near Amathūs, the next on the list. Albright, in JBL 56 (1937), p. 162 n. 52, insists that Gadara is not Gazara but "one of the many towns derived from the stem gdr." Schalit, p. 31, also reading "Gadara," identifies it with Gadora (mod. Tell Jadūr near es-Salt) in Transjordan; but Schürer's objections to the similar theory of Schlatter, p. 224, still hold.

against him a body of soldiers led by Sisenna, Antony and Servilius<sup>a</sup> to prevent him from occupying the place and to arrest him. For many of the Jews had flocked to Aristobulus, both on account of his former glory and especially because they always<sup>b</sup> welcomed revolutionary movements. Among others a certain Peitholaus, who was legate<sup>c</sup> at Jerusalem, deserted to him with a thousand men. Many<sup>d</sup> of those who joined him, however, were unarmed. But Aristobulus, who had decided to retire to Machaerūs, dismissed these men, who were without equipment—for they were of no use to him in action.—and taking the men who were armed, amounting to some eight thousand, marched away. And as the Romans fell upon them valiantly, they were defeated in battle; for though the Jews fought manfully<sup>e</sup> and eagerly, the enemy were too strong for them, and they were put to flight. Some five thousand of them were slain, while the rest were scattered and tried to save themselves as best they could. Aristobulus, however, escaped<sup>f</sup> to Machaerūs with more than a thousand men, and fortified the place, and though he was faring badly, none the less he was still of good hope.<sup>g</sup> But after withstanding a siege of two days and receiving many wounds,<sup>h</sup> he was taken prisoner and brought to

<sup>d</sup> Gabinus came to Egypt in the spring of 55 B.C. with Ptolemy XI Auletes, to restore him to the throne then held

Gabinus together with his son Antigonus, who had, by the way, fled from Rome with him. And having met with such ill fortune, Aristobulus was sent to Rome a second time; and there he was kept in chains, after being king and high priest three years and six months<sup>a</sup>; he was, moreover, a man of distinction and magnanimity. His children, however, were released by the Senate because Gabinus wrote that he had promised their mother this when she surrendered the strongholds. And so<sup>b</sup> they returned to Judaea.<sup>c</sup>

(2) Now while Gabinus was on an expedition against the Parthians and had already crossed the Euphrates, he changed his mind and returned to Egypt to restore Ptolemy to his kingdom.<sup>d</sup> But these events have been related elsewhere.<sup>e</sup> On this campaign, moreover, Gabinus, in accordance with Hyrcanus' instructions to him,<sup>f</sup> was supplied with grain, arms and money by Antipater, who also won over the Jews above Pelusium to his side and made them his allies to act as guards of the entrances to Egypt.<sup>g</sup> But when Gabinus returned from Egypt, he found Syria a prey to uprisings and disorder; for Aristobulus' son Alexander had later come into power a second time and had forced many of the Jews to revolt, and was marching over the country with a large army and killing all the Romans he met, and was closely besieging those who had taken refuge on Mount Gerizim, as it is called.

(3) On finding Syria in this condition, Gabinius sent Antipater, who was a man of good sense,<sup>a</sup> to the unruly elements, to see whether he could put a stop to their mad behaviour and persuade them to return to a more reasonable frame of mind. And so he came and brought many of them to their senses and induced them to do their duty; but he could not restrain Alexander, who with an army of thirty thousand Jews went to meet Gabinius, and was defeated in an engagement near Mount Tabor, in which ten thousand of his men fell.<sup>b</sup>

(vii. 1) Crassus, intending to march against the Parthians, came to Judaea and carried off the money in the temple, amounting to two thousand talents, which Pompey had left, and was prepared to strip the sanctuary of all its gold, which amounted to eight thousand talents.<sup>e</sup> He also took a bar of solid beaten gold, weighing three hundred minae; the mina with us is equal to two and a half pounds.<sup>f</sup> This bar was given to him by the guardian of the money,<sup>g</sup> a priest named Eleazar, not because of rascality—for he was a good and upright man,—but because, being entrusted with the keeping of the curtains of the sanctuary, which were of admirable beauty and costly workmanship, and hung from this bar, he saw Crassus intent on gathering up the gold, and had fears for

<sup>d</sup> This bibliographical note indicates that for part of §§ 106-118, which have no parallel in B.J., Josephus has used Strabo to supplement his earlier source, Nicolas; cf. the Appendix on Josephus' sources in the last volume of this translation.

<sup>f</sup> In the only other reference to the mina in Josephus, Ant. ii. 33, he equates it loosely with the Heb. shekel. According to Krauss, Talmudische Archäologie ii. 406, the Heb. mina weighed only  $1\frac{1}{2}$  Roman pounds. Reinach gives 728 grammes for the Heb. mina and 818 for  $2\frac{1}{2}$  Roman pounds. Thus Josephus' equation here is inaccurate.

Now this bar was in a hollow wooden bar, a fact which was unknown to all others, and which Eleazar alone knew. Crassus, however, although he took this bar with the understanding that he would not touch anything else in the temple, violated his oath and carried off all the gold in the sanctuary.

(2) But no one need wonder that there was so much wealth in our temple, for all the Jews throughout the habitable world, and those who worshipped God,<sup>a</sup> even those from Asia and Europe, had been contributing to it for a very long time. And there is no lack of witnesses<sup>b</sup> to the great amount of the sums mentioned, nor have they been raised to so great a figure through boastfulness or exaggeration on our part, but there are many historians who bear us out, in particular Strabo of Cappadocia, who writes as follows. “ Mithridates<sup>c</sup> sent to Cos and took the money which Queen Cleopatra had deposited there, and eight hundred talents of the Jews.” Now there is no public money among us except that which is God’s, and it is therefore evident that this money was transferred to Cos by the Jews of Asia because of their fear of Mithridates.<sup>a</sup> For it is not likely that those in Judaea, who possessed a fortified city and the temple, would have sent money to Cos, nor is it probable that the Jews living in Alexandria would have done this either, since they had no fear of Mithridates. And this same Strabo in another passage testifies that at the time when Sulla crossed over to Greece to make war on Mithridates, and sent Lucullus to put down the revolt of our nation in Cyrene,<sup>b</sup> the habitable world was filled with Jews, for he writes as follows. "There were four classes in the state of Cyrene; the first consisted of citizens, the second of farmers, the third of resident aliens sum of 800 talents is not incredible if we remember that contributions to the temple from Jews in the Diaspora consisted of many gifts in addition to the annual didrachm payment, cf. Heichelheim, Rom. Syria, p. 74. However, it would be much easier to accept Josephus' explanation if he had mentioned 80 talents instead of 800. See now J. Cohen, Judaica et Aegyptiaca (1941), pp. 60-64.

<sup>a</sup> On Cleopatra III of Egypt and her deposit of money in Cos in 102 B.C. see Ant. xiii. 349. Reinach conjectures that the 800 talents were deposited at the same time by her Jewish generals Chelkias and Ananias, since the sum is much too large to represent the contributions of the Jews of Asia Minor. Similarly Willrich, Urkundenfälschung, p. 74, insists that it was the Jews of Egypt who took away their money in fear of Ptolemy Lathyrus, and he charges Josephus with ignorance of the real situation in 88 B.C. But Strabo's language suggests that the 800 talents came from a different period (otherwise he would have written, "the money which Cleopatra and the Jews had deposited"). Moreover the

Although ἐπικρατεῖν usually means "to gain the mastery," "prevail," it may also mean, as I think it does here, "to make one's power felt." It seems to me unlikely that Strabo (or even Posidonius, who was not particularly friendly to the Jews) would have gone so far as to say that the Jews of the Diaspora dominated the various cities in which they lived. But I should hesitate to press the point. It may be added that one might also translate "which has not been occupied by it."

<sup>a</sup> Text slightly uncertain. That this statement about the Egyptian origin of the Jews, which is refuted by Josephus in Ap. i. 104, 223, 278, ii. 28 et al., is here allowed to stand indicates that he has been pretty accurate in quoting Strabo.

<sup>b</sup> By other historians. Crassus was defeated near Carrhae in Mesopotamia in the spring of 53 B.C. and soon after was killed. Debevoise writes, p. 95, "The disaster which the Roman arms had suffered at Carrhae made certain the were originally Egyptians and because those who left that country made their homes near by <sup>a</sup>; and they migrated to Cyrene because this country bordered on the kingdom of Egypt, as did Judaea—or rather, it formerly belonged to that kingdom.” These are Strabo’s own words.

(3) Now when Crassus had arranged everything the way he wished, he set out for Parthia and perished together with his entire army, as has been related elsewhere.<sup>b</sup> Cassius,<sup>c</sup> however, fled to Syria and took possession of it,<sup>d</sup> thus standing in the way of the Parthians who were making incursions into the country as a result of their victory over Crassus. Later he came to Tyre, and then went up to Judaea. Here he fell upon Tarichaeae,<sup>e</sup> which he quickly took, and made slaves of some thirty thousand men. He also killed Peitholaus, who had continued the revolt led by Aristobulus; and this he did at the instigation of Antipater, who at that time had great influence with him, and was then held in the greatest esteem by the Idumaeans also, from among whom <sup>f</sup> he took a wife of a distinguished Arab family, named Cypros <sup>g</sup>; and by her he had four sons, Phasaël, Here again Laqueur tries to show that Josephus' attitude toward Antipater and Herod is less favourable in Ant. than is that of his source (Nicolas) in B.J.; at the same time he admits that Nicolas had probably exaggerated the services of Antipater at the expense of Hyrcanus. So too Motzo in a monograph on this subject, cited by Momigliano, Ricerche, pp. 189-190. See further works cited in Appendix L.

quotation from Strabo in § 139, usually = Lat. curator or praefectus, rarely = procurator (Judaea), as in Ant. xviii. 89. In xvii. 6 it is applied to Saturninus, governor of Syria (= legatus Augusti pro praetore), who is elsewhere called ἡγεμών: in B.J. i. 225 Herod is appointed ἐπιμελετής of all Syria, while in the parallel Ant. xiv. 280 he is called στρατηγός. From these passages it would seem that Antipater was given a special office in 48 B.C. by Caesar, or earlier (cf. § 103) by Gabinus. He was not made procurator of Judaea, ἐπίτροπος, until 47 B.C., cf. § 143. Schürer, i. 313 n. 14, suggests that Gabinus had made him procurator, but if so this office must have been extra ordinem, since Judaea had been divided into five districts by Gabinus, as is pointed out by Momigliano, Rivista, p. 207. It may be, however, that Josephus here anticipates: Caesar came to Egypt in the autumn of 48 B.C. but did not get help from Mithridates and Antipater until the spring of 47 B.C. On this campaign see W. Judeich, Cäsar im Orient, 1885.

<sup>a</sup> As Dr. Thackeray notes in B.J. i. 187, Ascalon was 6 days' march from Pelusium, so that Mithridates must have been warned well in advance of the refusal of passage.

at Ascalon,<sup>a</sup> Antipater arrived with three thousand heavy-armed Jewish soldiers, and also managed to get the chiefs of Arabia to come to his aid; and it was owing to him that all the rulers of Syria furnished aid, not wishing to be outdone in their zeal for Caesar; among these were the prince Jamblichus and Ptolemy, the son of Soemus,<sup>b</sup> who lived on Mount Lebanon, and almost all the cities. Mithridates then left Syria and came to Pelusium, and as its inhabitants would not admit him, besieged the city. Foremost in bravery was Antipater, who was the first to pull down part of the wall, and so opened a way for the others to pour into the city. This was how he took Pelusium. But when Mithridates and Antipater with their men were on their way to Caesar, the Jews<sup>c</sup> who inhabited the district of Onias,<sup>d</sup> as it was called, prevented them from doing so. Antipater, however, persuaded them too to side with his party on the ground of their common nationality, especially when he showed them a letter from the high priest Hyrcanus, in which he urged them to be friendly to Caesar and receive his army hospitably and furnish it with all things necessary. And so, when they saw that Antipater and the high priest had the same wish, they complied.<sup>a</sup> And when those in the neighbourhood of Memphis heard that these Jews had joined Caesar's side, they too invited Mithridates to come to them. Accordingly he came and took them into his army as well.

(2) And when he had passed round the region called the Delta, he engaged the enemy at the Camp of the Jews,<sup>b</sup> as it is called. Mithridates commanded the right wing, and Antipater the left. And when they met in battle, Mithridates' wing gave way and would have been in danger of suffering a very grave disaster, if Antipater, who had already defeated the enemy (opposite him), had not come running with his own soldiers along the bank of the river and rescued him, at the same time putting to flight the Egyptians who had defeated Mithridates. And continuing in pursuit, he also seized their camp, and brought back<sup>c</sup> Mithridates, who had been separated far from him in the rout. Of the latter's men some eight hundred fell, while Antipater lost only fifty.<sup>d</sup> Mithridates thereupon wrote an account of this to Caesar, declaring that Antipater had been responsible for their victory and also for their safety; and as a result of this, Caesar commended Antipater on that occasion, and, what is more, made use of him for the most dangerous tasks throughout the entire war. The natural result was that Antipater was wounded in some of the battles.<sup>e</sup>

(3) Moreover, when Caesar in the course of time concluded the war and sailed to Syria,<sup>a</sup> he honoured him greatly; while confirming Hyrcanus in the high-priesthood,<sup>b</sup> he gave Antipater Roman citizenship and exemption from taxation everywhere. It is said by many writers that Hyrcanus took part in this campaign<sup>c</sup> and came to Egypt.<sup>d</sup> And this statement of mine is attested by Strabo of Cappadocia, who writes as follows, on the authority of Asinius.<sup>e</sup> "After Mithridates, Hyrcanus, the high priest of the Jews, also invaded Egypt." And again this same Strabo in another passage writes as follows, on the authority of Hysicrates.<sup>f</sup> "Mithridates went out alone, but Antipater, the procurator<sup>g</sup> of Judaea, was called to Ascalon by him and provided him with an additional three thousand<sup>h</sup> soldiers, and won over the other princes: and the high priest Hyrcanus also took part in the campaign."<sup>i</sup> These are Strabo's own words.

other executed by beheading at the hands of Scipio<sup>a</sup>; and he begged Caesar to take pity on him for having been driven from his realm: and in this connexion he accused Hyrcanus and Antipater of governing the people by violence and having acted lawlessly toward him.<sup>b</sup> But Antipater, who was present, defended himself on these points of the accusation which he saw had been brought against him, and declared that Antigonus and his fellows were revolutionaries and fomenters of sedition<sup>c</sup>; at the same time he recalled how he had laboured on behalf of the Romans and assisted them in their plans of war, speaking of things to which his own person testified<sup>d</sup>; with justice, he added, had Aristobulus been deported to Rome, for he had always been hostile to the Romans and never well-disposed toward them. As for the brother of Antigonus who had been punished<sup>e</sup> for brigandage by Scipio, he had met the fate he deserved, and if he had suffered this punishment it was not because of any violence or injustice on the part of him who had inflicted it.

(5) After Antipater had made this speech, Caesar appointed Hyrcanus high priest,<sup>f</sup> and gave Antipater power to rule in whatever form he preferred. And as the latter left the decision to him, he appointed Caesar and the Roman Senate honour Antipater and Hyrcanus.

him procurator of Judaea.<sup>a</sup> He also permitted Hyrcanus, who had asked this favour of him, to rebuild the walls of his native city,<sup>b</sup> for they had been lying in ruins ever since Pompey demolished them. And he sent instructions to the consuls at Rome to record these grants in the Capitol.<sup>c</sup> And the decree enacted by the Senate was as follows.<sup>d</sup> "Lucius Valerius, son of Lucius, the praetor,<sup>e</sup> consulted with the Senate on the Ides of December in the Temple of Concord.<sup>f</sup> And at the writing of the decree there were present Lucius Coponius, son of Lucius, of the Colline tribe, and Papirius of the Quirine tribe. Whereas Alexander,<sup>g</sup> son of Jason, Numenius, son of Antiochus, and Alexander, son of Dorotheus, envoys of the Jews and worthy men and allies, have discussed the matter of renewing the relation of goodwill and friendship which they formerly maintained with the Romans, and have brought as a token of the alliance a golden shield worth fifty thousand gold pieces,<sup>h</sup> and have asked that letters be given them to the autonomous cities and kings in order that their country and ports may be secure and suffer no harm,<sup>i</sup> it has been determined more exactly in 139 B.C.: cf. 1 Macc. xv. 16-21, where a similar letter of the Roman consul Lucius is cited: cf. further works cited in Appendix J.

<sup>f</sup> Schürer, i. 251 n. 22 end, argues against Mommsen (Hermes ix. (1875), 281 ff.) that this may be an earlier Temple of Concord than that built in 121 B.C., and that thus the dating of the decree in 139 B.C. is not excluded.

<sup>h</sup> cf. 1 Macc. xiv. 21, xv. 18, which mention a gold shield of 1000 minae = 50,000 didrachms or staters.

<sup>a</sup> There is no reason why Josephus' source should give the date of a Roman decree in terms of the Macedonian calendar; moreover the decree is dated internally on the Ides of December, while Panemus = June-July. The sentence evidently refers to the following Athenian decree, which is to be dated in the time of Hyrcanus I (see notes following); we must, however, emend "ninth" to "twenty-ninth," as Homolle proposes, which would give us 106 B.C., agreeing with the date of the archonship of Agathocles; we must creed to form a relation of goodwill and friendship with them and to provide them with all the things which they have requested, and to accept the shield which they have brought." This took place in the ninth year of Hyrcanus the high priest and ethnarch, in the month Panemus.<sup>a</sup> Among the Athenian people also Hyrcanus obtained honours, for he had been of great service to them. And they wrote and sent him a resolution, of which the contents were as follows. "In the presidency and priesthood of Dionysius, son of Asclepiades, on the fifth day before the end of the month of Panemus, a decree of the Athenians was delivered to the magistrates.<sup>b</sup> In the archonship of Agathocles,<sup>c</sup> when Eucles, son of Xenander, of the Aithalidean deme,<sup>d</sup> was scribe, on the eleventh of the month of Munychion,<sup>e</sup> on the eleventh day<sup>f</sup> of the prytany, a meeting of the presiding officers (proedroi) being held in the theatre, Dorotheus of the Erchian deme<sup>g</sup> and his fellow presiding officers also delete the words "and ethnarch," which could hardly have been applied to Hyrcanus I.

<sup>b</sup> The text and meaning of the last clause are slightly uncertain. Reinach emends to read, "and that all may rival the one thus honoured (i.e. Hyrcanus) in zeal toward us." But Reinach's "thus" (ὥδε) would have to be οὕτως, as Prof. B. D. Meritt writes privately through Prof. Capps; Prof. Meritt also suggests that ζηλώση (v.l. -ει) may be an iotacism for ζηλώσι. Prof. Post reads δηλώση, "reveal the zeal . . . of those already honoured." But I think ζηλώση may stand. <sup>c</sup> ms. P adds "the high priest."

disorders therein by both threatening and advising the people to remain quiet. For, he said, those who were on the side of Hyrcanus would be left in peace and could live undisturbed in the enjoyment of their own possessions, but if they clung to the hope of achieving something by revolution and were counting on any gains therefrom, they would have in him a master in place of a protector, and in Hyrcanus a tyrant in place of a king,<sup>a</sup> and in the Romans and Caesar bitter enemies in place of rulers.<sup>b</sup> For they would not allow any man to be removed from office whom they themselves had placed therein. Through such words he restored order throughout the country by his own efforts.

(2) But as he saw that Hyrcanus was dull and sluggish,<sup>c</sup> he appointed his eldest son Phasaël governor of Jerusalem and the surrounding region, and entrusted Galilee to his second son Herod, who was still quite young; he was, in fact, only fifteen years old.<sup>d</sup> But his youth in no way hindered him, and being a young man of high spirit, he quickly found an opportunity for showing his prowess. For on learning that Ezekias, a bandit leader, was overrunning the borders of Syria with a large troop, he caught and killed him and many of the bandits with him. This achievement of his was greatly admired by the Syrians, for he had cleared their country of a gang of bandits of whom they longed to be rid. And so they sang his praises for this deed throughout their villages and cities, saying that he had given them peace and the secure enjoyment of their possessions. And through this action he became known to Sextus Caesar, a kinsman of the great Caesar and governor of Syria.<sup>a</sup> Thereupon the desire to emulate Herod's achievements seized his brother Phasaël, and being moved by the thought of the reputation Herod had won, he was ambitious not to be behind him in achieving like fame; and so he made the inhabitants of Jerusalem feel very friendly toward him, and though he kept the city under his own rule, he did not show any lack of discretion in governing it<sup>b</sup> or abuse his authority. This situation made it possible for Antipater to receive from the nation the respect shown a king and such honour as might be enjoyed by one who is an absolute master. With all this glory, however, he did not, as so often seems to happen,<sup>b</sup> in any way alter his friendship and loyalty to Hyrcanus.

<sup>d</sup> As Otto points out, Herodes, p. 18, Josephus' emphasis on Herod's youth indicates that "fifteen years" is not a scribal error for "twenty-five years." However Josephus is inconsistent: in Ant. xvii. 118 he tells us that Herod was about seventy when he died (in 4 B.C.), hence he must have been about twenty-five in 47 B.C.

<sup>c</sup> §§ 163-167 differ considerably from the account in B.J. i. 208-209 where Antipater appears in a more favourable, and Hyrcanus in a more unfavourable, light. Laqueur, pp. 176 ff., argues that §§ 163-164 in Ant. were a later addition to B.J., which in turn was made to agree with the revised account by being interpolated.

from Judaea and Hyrcanus' wealth, they became hostile toward him. Moreover Antipater had formed a friendship with the Roman generals, and after persuading Hyrcanus to send them money, he took this gift and appropriated it for himself, and then sent it as though it came from him and were not a gift from Hyrcanus. Hyrcanus heard of this but gave the matter no thought; on the contrary he was actually pleased.<sup>a</sup> But the chief Jews were in great fear when they saw how powerful and reckless Herod was and how much he desired to be a dictator.<sup>b</sup> And so they came to Hyrcanus and now openly accused Antipater, saying, "How long will you keep quiet in the face of what is happening? Do you not see that Antipater and his sons have girded themselves with royal power, while you have only the name of king given you?"<sup>c</sup> But do not let these things go unnoticed, nor consider yourself free of danger because you are careless of yourself and the kingdom. For no longer are Antipater and his sons merely your stewards in the government, and do not deceive yourself with the belief that they are; they are openly acknowledged to be masters. Thus Herod, his son, has killed Ezekias and many of his men<sup>d</sup> in violation of our Law, which forbids us to slay a man, even an evildoer, unless he has first been condemned by the

Synhedrion to suffer this fate.<sup>a</sup> He, however, has dared to do this without authority from you."

(4) Having heard these arguments, Hyrcanus was persuaded. And his anger was further kindled by the mothers of the men who had been murdered by Herod, for every day in the temple they kept begging the king and the people to have Herod brought to judgment in the Synhedrion for what he had done.<sup>b</sup> Being, therefore, moved by these pleas, Hyrcanus summoned Herod to stand trial for the crimes of which he was accused.<sup>c</sup> Accordingly, after he had settled affairs in Galilee as he thought was to his best interests,<sup>d</sup> because his father had advised him not to enter the city as a private individual but with the security of a bodyguard, he came with a troop sufficient for the purposes of the journey, and that he might not appear too formidable to Hyrcanus by arriving with a larger body of men and yet not be entirely unarmed and unprotected; and so he went to his trial. However Sextus, the governor of Syria, wrote to urge Hyrcanus to acquit Herod of the charge, and added threats as to what would happen if he disobeyed.<sup>e</sup> The letter from Sextus gave Hyrcanus a pretext for letting Herod go without suffering any harm from the Synhedrion; for he loved him as a

<sup>e</sup> The compulsion exercised by Sextus Caesar is cited by Schalit, p. 60, as evidence that Judaea at this time was still in the position of a civitas stipendiaria, to which it had been reduced by Pompey and Gabinius. But as Julius Caesar had already improved, or was about to improve, the political status of Judaea, it may be that Sextus Caesar was exceeding his authority. See further works listed in Appendix L.

<sup>a</sup> Josephus' accounts of Herod's trial in B.J. and Ant. are rather confusing. In B.J. i. 211 he states that Hyrcanus acquitted Herod on orders from Sextus Caesar; in §§ 212 ff. Herod, after being appointed governor of Coele-Syria, came to Jerusalem with an army, prepared to depose Hyrcanus if summoned to a second trial. Whether the second trial was held or why it should be held after Herod's acquittal (cf. Mishnah, Sanhedrin, iv. 1) is not clear. Josephus' statement in Ant., § 170, that Hyrcanus let Herod go (ἀπολῦσαι) evidently refers to an acquittal. The story that follows in §§ 171-176 (which has no parallel in B.J.) should logically precede the statement about Herod's acquittal; it seems to be a later insertion, probably based on Jewish tradition (for son.<sup>a</sup> But when Herod stood in the Synhedrion<sup>b</sup> with his troops, he overawed them all, and no one of those who had denounced him before his arrival dared to accuse him thereafter; instead there was silence and doubt about what was to be done. While they were in this state, someone named Samaias,<sup>c</sup> an upright man and for that reason superior to fear, arose and said, "Fellow councillors and King, I do not myself know of, nor do I suppose that you can name, any-one who when summoned before you<sup>d</sup> for trial has ever presented such an appearance. For no matter who it was that came before this Synhedrion for trial, he has shown himself humble and has assumed the manner of one who is fearful and seeks mercy<sup>e</sup> from you<sup>f</sup> by letting his hair grow long and wearing a black garment. But this fine fellow Herod, who is accused of murder and has been summoned on no less grave a charge than this, stands here clothed in purple, with the hair of his head carefully arranged and with his a rabbinic parallel see Derenbourg, pp. 146-148). But another difficulty remains in Ant. In § 177 Josephus tells us that Hyrcanus postponed Herod's trial; in § 182 he states that Herod's friends reminded him of his acquittal (ἀφέσεως). Thus neither of the two parallel accounts makes it clear whether Herod was tried and acquitted or was released without an actual trial. Incidentally, according to Mishnah, Sanhedrin, ii. 2, the king was not competent to act as a judge.

soldiers round him, in order to kill us if we condemn him as the law prescribes, and to save himself by outraging justice. But it is not Herod whom I should blame for this or for putting his own interests above the law, but you and the king, for giving him such great licence. Be assured, however, that God is great, and this man, whom you now wish to release for Hyrcanus' sake, will one day punish you and the king as well." And he was not mistaken in either part of his prediction. For when Herod assumed royal power, he killed Hyrcanus and all the other members of the Synhedrion with the exception of Samaias. Him he held in the greatest honour, both because of his uprightness and because when the city was later besieged by Herod and Sossius, he advised the people to admit Herod, and said that on account of their sins they would not be able to escape him. And of these events we shall speak in the proper place.<sup>a</sup>

(5) <sup>b</sup> Now when Hyrcanus saw that the members of the Synhedrion were bent on putting Herod to death, he postponed the trial to another day, and secretly sent to Herod, advising him to flee from the city, for in that way, he said, he might escape danger. Herod accordingly withdrew to Damascus as if fleeing from the king, and coming to Sextus Caesar and making his position secure, he was determined not to obey if he were again summoned to a trial before the Synhedrion. Thereupon the members of the Synhedrion became indignant and attempted

Nor was this fear long in being realized, for Herod did come against him with an army, being angry because of the trial and because he had been summoned to render an account of himself to the Synhedrion. Herod, however, was prevented from attacking Jerusalem<sup>e</sup> by his father Antipater and his brother, who went out to meet him and quieted his impetuosity, urging him not to undertake any violent action, but merely to strike terror into Hyrcanus by threats and not proceed further against one who had made it possible for him to attain to his present high office. And as he expressed indignation at having been summoned to stand trial, they begged him to remember his acquittal and to be grateful for it rather than consider the unpleasant side<sup>f</sup> and be ungrateful for his deliverance. He ought, they said, to reflect that if the Deity decides the changing fortunes of war, the injustice<sup>g</sup> of his cause might weigh more heavily than his military skill<sup>h</sup>; for that reason he should not be very confident of a victory when he was planning to make war on his king and comrade, one who had conferred many benefits upon him but had never done him any unkindness ; as for the things of which he complained, if Hyrcanus had given him the merest suspicion and shadow of harsh treatment, it was through evil counsellors and not of his own accord. To these arguments Herod yielded, believing that it was enough for his future plans merely to have made a show of his strength to the people. This, then, was the state of affairs in Judaea.<sup>a</sup>

It reads as follows. ' I, Julius Caesar, Imperator and Pontifex Maximus, Dictator for the second time,<sup>a</sup> have decided as follows with the advice of the council.<sup>b</sup> Whereas the Jew Hyrcanus, son of Alexander, both now and in the past, in time of peace as well as in war, has shown loyalty and zeal toward our state, as many commanders have testified on his behalf, and in the recent Alexandrian war came to our aid with fifteen hundred soldiers.<sup>c</sup> and being sent by me to Mithridates, surpassed in bravery all those in the ranks, for these reasons it is my wish that Hyrcanus, son of Alexander, and his children shall be ethnarchs of the Jews and shall hold the office of high priest of the Jews for all time in accordance with their national customs, and that he and his sons shall be our allies and also be numbered among our particular friends ; and whatever high-priestly rights or other privileges<sup>d</sup> exist in accordance with their laws, these he and his children shall possess by my command. And if, during this period, any question shall arise concerning the Jews' manner of life, it is my pleasure that the decision shall rest with them.<sup>e</sup> Nor do I approve of troops being given winter-quarters among them or of money being demanded of them.' Julius Caesar on the high priestly office of Hyrcanus and his sons.

<sup>c</sup> MS. P "in the city," meaning Rome. According to the other MSS. Caesar was providing for hospitality to the Jewish envoys in the cities of Asia while en route.

<sup>d</sup> If this means Caesar's first dictatorship (48 B.C.), we should have to add τὸ δεύτερον after ὑπατος, cf. Holmes iii. 567. Momigliano dates it in 48 B.C., other scholars in 47, 46 or 44 B.C., see works listed in Appendix J.

emend “ fifth time ” to “ second time ” and refer the document to 47 B.C., although Caesar was not Consul in that year, or to 46 B.C.; see next note.

Hyrcanus permission to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem in 47 B.C., cf. § 144. Niese therefore assumes that we have here a senatus consultum of 44 B.C. confirming the oral decrees given by Caesar a few years earlier. Mendelssohn and included parts of the following sections, 205-211. See works listed in Appendix J.

<sup>a</sup> μισθωσις "rent-term" was probably taken over from Ptolemaic usage, cf. W. Westermann in JJP 59 (1938), 9. If the "second year of the rent-term" here coincides with a sabbatical year (as one naturally supposes), it confirms the dating of the document in 44 B.C., as the sabbatical year would be that which extended from Oct. 44 to Oct. 43 B.C. This dating, moreover, fits in perfectly with the reckoning of sabbatical years given above, Ant. xii. 378 note a; see also below, § 375.

<sup>g</sup> The words "shall pay" are conjecturally supplied; one ms. adds "shall have" after "Hyrcanus." The sentence is differently translated by Heichelheim, Rom. Syria, p. 232, "and that Hyrcanus, the son of Alexander, and his sons, have as tribute of that city from those that occupy the land and for what they export every year to Sidon, etc." But this rendering requires emendation of the Greek, which Heichelheim does not supply.

amount of twenty thousand six hundred and seventy-five modii every year except in the seventh year, which they call the sabbatical year, wherein they neither plow nor take fruit from the trees. As for the villages in the Great Plain,<sup>a</sup> which Hyrcanus and his forefathers before him possessed, it is the pleasure of the Senate<sup>b</sup> that Hyrcanus and the Jews shall retain them with the same rights as they formerly had, and that the ancient rights which the Jews and their high priests and priests<sup>c</sup> had in relation to each other should continue, and also the privileges which they received by vote of the people and the Senate. And that they be permitted to enjoy these rights at Lydda also.<sup>d</sup> As for the places, lands and farms, the fruits of which the kings of Syria and Phoenicia,<sup>e</sup> as allies of the Romans, were permitted to enjoy by their gift, these the Senate decrees that the ethnarch Hyrcanus and the Jews shall have. And that to Hyrcanus and his children and to the envoys sent by him shall be given the right to sit with the members of the senatorial order as spectators of the contests of gladiators and wild beasts; and<sup>f</sup> that when they request permission of the Dictator or Master of the horse<sup>g</sup> to enter the Senate chamber,

(7) "Gaius Caesar, Imperator, Dictator for the fourth time, Consul for the fifth time, designated Dictator for life,<sup>b</sup> made the following speech concerning the rights of Hyrcanus, son of Alexander, the high priest and ethnarch of the Jews. 'Inasmuch as the high commanders in the provinces before me have testified on behalf of Hyrcanus, the high priest of the Jews, and of the Jews themselves before the Senate and the people of Rome, and the people and Senate have expressed thanks to them, it is fitting that we too should be mindful of this and provide that there be given by the Senate and people of Rome to Hyrcanus and the Jewish nation and the sons of Hyrcanus a token of gratitude worthy of their loyalty to us and of the benefits which they have conferred upon us.'"

the neighbouring Jews, some of your<sup>a</sup> envoys also being present, have appealed to me and declared that you are preventing them by statute from observing their national customs and sacred rites. Now it displeases me that such statutes should be made against our friends and allies and that they should be forbidden to live in accordance with their customs and to contribute money to common meals and sacred rites, for this they are not forbidden to do even in Rome. For example, Gaius Caesar, our consular praetor,<sup>b</sup> by edict forbade religious societies to assemble in the city, but these people alone he did not forbid to do so or to collect contributions of money or to hold common meals.<sup>c</sup> Similarly do I forbid other religious societies but permit these people alone to assemble and feast in accordance with their native customs and ordinances. And if you have made any statutes against our friends and allies, you will do well to revoke them because of their worthy deeds on our behalf and their goodwill toward us."

(9) After the death of Gaius,<sup>d</sup> Marcus Antonius and Publius Dolabella, the consuls, convened the Senate and having introduced the envoys sent by Hyrcanus, discussed the requests they presented, and made a treaty of friendship with them. Pollian tribe, and Publius Serrius.<sup>a</sup> Publius Dolabella and Marcus Antonius, the consuls,<sup>b</sup> made speeches.<sup>c</sup> As for the decision rendered by Gaius Caesar, with the concurrence of the Senate, concerning the Jews, which there was not time to have registered in the Treasury, this matter we wish to be disposed of as the consuls Publius Dolabella and Marcus Antonius have decided, and that these decisions be recorded in tablets and brought to the quaestors of the city, and that they take care to have them inscribed on two-leaved tablets. They were dated the fifth day before the Ides of February<sup>d</sup> in the Temple of Concord.<sup>e</sup> The envoys from the high priest Hyrcanus were the following: Lysimachus, son of Pausanias, Alexander, son of Theodorus, Patroclus, son of Chaireas, and Jonathan, son of Onias.”

(11) One of these envoys Hyrcanus sent also to Dolabella, who was then governor of Asia,<sup>f</sup> requesting him to exempt the Jews from military service and permit them to maintain their native customs and live in accordance with them. And this request he readily obtained; for Dolabella, on receiving the letter from Hyrcanus, without even taking counsel, sent to all (the officials) in Asia, and wrote to Ephesus,

(12) "In the presidency of Artemon, on the first day of the month of Lenaeon,<sup>a</sup> Dolabella, Imperator, to the magistrates, council and people of Ephesus, greeting. Alexander, son of Theodorus, the envoy of Hyrcanus, son of Alexander, the high priest and ethnarch of the Jews, has explained to me that his co-religionists<sup>b</sup> cannot undertake military service because they may not bear arms or march on the days of the Sabbath; nor can they obtain the native foods to which they are accustomed. I, therefore, like the governors before me, grant them exemption from military service and allow them to follow their native customs and to come together for sacred and holy rites in accordance with their law, and to make offerings for their sacrifices; and it is my wish that you write these instructions to the various cities."

Ephesus.

(13) These, then, were the favours which Dolabella granted to our people when Hyrcanus sent an envoy to him. And Lucius Lentulus, the consul,<sup>c</sup> declared. "Those Jews who are Roman citizens and observe Jewish rites and practise them in Ephesus, I<sup>d</sup> released from military service before the tribunal on the twelfth day before the Kalends of October<sup>e</sup> in consideration of their religious scruples, in the consulship of Lucius Lentulus and Gaius Marcellus. <sup>c</sup> = Lat. practor pro consule: it is not necessary to emend ὕπατος to ἀνθύπατος, cf. Magie, p. 84 and Juster i. 116. This document does not belong to the decrees based on the ruling of Lucius Lentulus in 49 B.C., unless Gaius Fannius is to be citizens, no one should bother them about military service, inasmuch as the consul Lucius Cornelius Lentulus had exempted the Jews from military service in consideration of their religious scruples. <sup>a</sup> Exactly what priestly revenues (for Jerusalem) are meant is not clear; καρπός in the LXX sometimes means "first-fruits," but here it may include tithes, as Reinach suggests.

<sup>c</sup> A prytanis named Cratippus is mentioned in a Pergamene inscription to be dated 150-50 B.C., according to Juster, i. 134 n. 3, citing Ath. Mitt. 17 (1902), 126 and JÖAI 8 (1905), 238. See further note a on p. 582.

" Most scholars assume that this is Antiochus IX Cyzicenus, son of Antiochus VII Sidetes, cf. Ant. xiii. 246 ff., 270 ff. Some scholars, however, propose to read "son of Demetrius," meaning Antiochus Sidetes, son of Demetrius I (less probably Antiochus VIII Grypus, son of Demetrius II). With the latter I agree. The emendation "son of Demetrius" is not too arbitrary, considering that in several places Josephus' text gives the wrong surname to a Seleucid ruler; see further the following notes.

that King Antiochus, son of Antiochus,<sup>a</sup> shall do no injury to the Jews, the allies of the Romans : and that the fortresses, harbours, territory and whatever else he may have taken from them shall be restored to them <sup>b</sup> ; and that it shall be lawful <sup>c</sup> for them to export goods from their harbours and that no king or people exporting goods from the territory of the Jews or from their harbours shall be untaxed except only Ptolemy, king of Alexandria,<sup>d</sup> because he is our ally and friend ; and that the garrison in Joppa shall be expelled, as they have requested. And one of our council, Lucius Pettius,<sup>e</sup> a worthy and excellent man, has given orders that we shall take care that these things are done as the Senate has decreed, and that we shall see to the safe return of the envoys to their homes. We have also admitted Theodorus to the council and assembly, accepting from him the letter and the decree of the Senate ; and after he had addressed us with great earnest-

<sup>a</sup> Reinach suggests that Ptolemy IX Alexander is meant ; he was called to Egypt from Cyprus by his mother Cleopatra III in 107 B.C. If the Pergamene decree is to be dated in the reign of Antiochus Sidetes (who died in 120 B.C.), Reinach's conjecture is impossible, and Ptolemy VII Euergetes II (Physcon) must be meant. On his friendly relations with Rome, cf. Diodorus xxxiii. 28 a : he says that Scipio Aemilianus and his colleagues visited Egypt (c. 135 B.C.) and Syria, τὴν προϋπάρχουσαν αὐτοῖς φιλίαν πρὸς ἅπαντας ἀναγεωσάμενοι.

<sup>e</sup> F. Münzer in PW 19 (1938), 1381 suggests that in spite of the wording of the text L. Pettius may have been a member of a Commission of the Roman Senate or even a praetor in Rome. This would be more likely if we accepted Reinach's emendation of τῇ βουλῇ for τῆς βουλῆς, meaning that L. Pettius gave orders to the council of Pergamum, not that he was one of the council.

<sup>c</sup> Variant "and that we shall not have legal disputes with them"—an inferior reading. The document cited in § 235 states that the Jews of Sardis have had their own courts "from the earliest times." In this document they are permitted to have a synagogue in addition.

<sup>a</sup> Variant " Marcus Junius Pompeius, son of Brutus." Ritschl, Mendelssohn, Schürer and others think that the original reading gave the name of the celebrated Marcus Brutus, who was in Asia in 42 B.C. Reinach suggests that the name was that of Marcus Juncus, governor of Asia and Bithynia in 74 B.C. See works listed in Appendix J.

(26) Now there are many other such decrees, passed by the Senate and the Imperators<sup>d</sup> of the Romans, relating to Hyrcanus<sup>e</sup> and our nation, as well as resolutions of cities and rescripts of provincial governors<sup>f</sup> in reply to letters on the subject of our rights, all of which those who will read our work without malice will find it possible to take on faith from the documents we have cited. For since we have furnished clear and visible proofs of our friendship with the Romans, indicating those decrees engraved on bronze pillars and tablets which remain to this day and will continue to remain in the Capitol, I have refrained from citing them all as being both superfluous and disagreeable; for I cannot suppose that anyone is so stupid that he will actually refuse to believe the statements about the friendliness of

years and six months.<sup>a</sup> This, however, has been related elsewhere.<sup>b</sup>

(2) On the outbreak of the war<sup>c</sup> that followed Caesar's death and the dispersal to various quarters of all in authority in order to raise an army, Cassius arrived in Syria to take over<sup>d</sup> the armies near Apamea. And after raising the siege, he won over both Bassus and Murcus, and descending upon the cities, he collected arms and soldiers from them, and imposed heavy tribute upon them. Worst of all was his treatment of Judaea, from which he exacted seven hundred<sup>e</sup> talents of silver. But Antipater, seeing that affairs were in fearful disorder,<sup>f</sup> apportioned the exacting of money and gave each of his sons a part to collect, and gave orders that some of it was to be raised by Malichus,<sup>g</sup> who was hostile toward him, and the rest by others. And Herod, being the first to raise the sum set for him from Galilee,<sup>h</sup> became especially friendly with Cassius. For he thought it prudent to court the Romans and secure their goodwill at the expense of others.<sup>i</sup> But the officials of

the other cities, every last man of them, were sold as slaves, and at that time Cassius reduced to servitude four cities, of which the most important were Gophna<sup>a</sup> and Emmaus,<sup>b</sup> the others being Lydda<sup>c</sup> and Thamna.<sup>d</sup> And Cassius was moved by anger to the point of doing away with Malichus—for he had started to attack him<sup>e</sup>—had not Hyrcanus through the agency of Antipater sent him a hundred talents of his own money<sup>f</sup> and so stopped his hostile move.

(3) But when Cassius had left Judaea,<sup>g</sup> Malichus plotted against Antipater, thinking that his death<sup>g</sup> would make for the security of Hyrcanus' rule.<sup>h</sup> These plans of his did not, however, remain unknown to Antipater, who, on learning of them, moved across the Jordan and collected an army of Arabs as well as natives. Thereupon Malichus, being a shrewd<sup>i</sup> fellow, denied the plot and defended himself under oath before both him and his sons,<sup>j</sup> saying that with Phasaël guarding Jerusalem and Herod having

<sup>g</sup> Lat. adds, "with much money." Whether Josephus here refers to the events of the first half of 43 B.C., when Cassius was preparing to fight Dolabella (§ 223) or of the first half of 42 B.C., when he was preparing to fight Mark Antony and Octavian, is not clear. If the latter, he is anticipating events that took place after the murder of Antipater in 43 B.C. (§ 282); cf. Otto, Herodes, pp. 21-22.

custody of the arms, he would never have entertained such a notion seeing how impossible it would be ; and so he became reconciled with Antipater, and they came to an agreement at the time when Murcus<sup>a</sup> was governing Syria, who, on learning that Malichus was stirring up a revolt in Judaea,<sup>b</sup> came very near putting him to death, but on the plea of Antipater spared his life.

(4) <sup>c</sup> Now Antipater in saving Malichus' life had unwittingly, it turned out, saved his own murderer. For Cassius and Murcus collected an army and entrusted the entire charge of it to Herod ; and they made him governor of Coele-Syria,<sup>d</sup> giving him ships<sup>e</sup> and a force of cavalry and infantry, and also promised to appoint him king of Judaea after the war which they had just then begun with Antony and the young Caesar.<sup>f</sup> And as Malichus was now in greater fear than ever of Antipater, he sought to put him out of the way, and with money persuaded Hycanus' butler, at whose house they were both being entertained, to kill Antipater<sup>g</sup> by poisoning ; and having soldiers there, he restored order in the city. But to Herod and Phasaël, who, on learning of the plot against their father, were incensed, Malichus again denied any part in it and professed to have no knowledge of the murder. This was the manner in which Antipater died, a man distinguished for piety, justice and devotion to his country.<sup>a</sup> But while one of his sons, Herod, resolved to avenge his father at once by leading his army against Malichus, the elder son Phasaël thought it better to get their man by cunning lest it should be thought that they were beginning a civil war. He <sup>b</sup> therefore accepted Malichus' defence and pretended to believe that he had done nothing criminal in connexion with Antipater's death; he then arranged the burial of his father. As for Herod, he came to Samaria and finding it in a sorry condition, repaired the damage, and put an end to the quarrels among its people.

<sup>a</sup> In B.J. Josephus characterizes Antipater as "a man of great energy in the conduct of affairs, especially in recovering and preserving the kingdom for Hyrcanus." Here, if 600

(5) Not long afterwards, when the festival<sup>c</sup> took place at Jerusalem, he came to the city with his soldiers, and Malichus in fear sought to persuade Hyrcanus not to permit him to enter. Hyrcanus let himself be so persuaded, and gave the pretext for keeping him out that it was not proper to admit a crowd of foreigners when the people were in a state of ritual purity. But Herod paid little attention to anywhere, one would expect a considerably less favourable estimate in Ant. if Laqueur's theory of the anti-Herodian revision of B.J. in Ant. is correct. But, on the contrary, Ant. is more favourable than B.J. It is significant that Laqueur passes over this difficulty in silence.

his messengers,<sup>a</sup> and entered the city by night, to the terror of Malichus, who, however, did not give up his assumption of innocence but wept for Antipater and ostensibly mourned his memory as a friend; nevertheless he secretly provided himself with a bodyguard.<sup>b</sup> But Herod and his friends still thought it best not to unmask his pretence; on the contrary, they, in turn, treated Malichus with friendliness in order to avoid suspicion.

(6) However Herod wrote to Cassius about the death of his father, and he, knowing what kind of man Malichus was,<sup>c</sup> wrote in reply that he should avenge his father, and he secretly sent to the military tribunes at Tyre, ordering them to assist Herod in his plan to carry out justice. Now when Cassius had taken Laodicea,<sup>d</sup> and they presented themselves officially, bringing him crowns and money, Herod expected that Malichus would meet his punishment on coming there. He, however, being near Tyre in Phoenicia, suspected what was being done, and played for greater stakes; and as his son was a hostage in Tyre, he came to the city, determined to steal him away and depart for Judaea and then, when Cassius was marching in haste against Antony,<sup>e</sup> to cause the nation to revolt, and seize power for himself. These plans, however, were opposed by

<sup>c</sup> In B.J. Hyrcanus says more concretely, "Cassius has saved both me and my country by destroying one who conspired against both." Josephus there adds, "Whether he

So they came out, and meeting him near the city on the seashore, stabbed him to death. Hyrcanus was struck speechless with amazement at what had been done, and on recovering with some difficulty, inquired of Herod's men what this act might mean and who had had Malichus slain. But when they said that Cassius had ordered this, he commended the deed, saying that Malichus was a very bad man and a conspirator against his country.<sup>c</sup> Such, then, was the penalty which Malichus paid for his lawless act against Antipater.

but although he wished to rush to his brother's side, was prevented by illness : finally Phasael by his own efforts got the better of Helix and shut him up in a tower, but later let him go under a truce : he also reproached Hyrcanus for acting with his foes although he had received many kindnesses from him. For Malichus' brother, having stirred up a revolt, was then guarding a good many fortresses, including Masada,<sup>a</sup> the strongest of all. Accordingly when Herod had recovered from his illness, he came against him and took from him all the fortresses he held, after which he released him under a truce.

(xii. 1) But Antigonus, the son of Aristobulus, who had collected an army and sought the favour of Fabius with bribes, was brought back to his country by Ptolemy, the son of Mennaëus, because of their kinship.<sup>b</sup> He was also aided by Marion, whom Cassius had left as prince<sup>c</sup> of Tyre, for that worthy on occupying Syria had controlled it through small principalities.<sup>d</sup> Marion therefore invaded Galilee, which lay on his borders, and captured three strongholds, in which he placed garrisons. But Herod came against him also and took from him all these places<sup>e</sup>; the Tyrian garrison, however, he considerably released, and even gave gifts to some of them out of goodwill to their city.<sup>f</sup> After achieving these things, he went to meet Antigonas, and joining battle with him, defeated him and drove him out of Judaea before he had time to penetrate further than its border.<sup>a</sup> And when he arrived in Jerusalem, Hyrcanus and the people wreathed his head with crowns.<sup>b</sup> As Herod had already become connected by an agreement of marriage with the family of Hyrcanus, he was for that reason the more protective of him; he was, in fact, about to marry the daughter of Aristobulus' son Alexander and granddaughter of Hyrcanus,<sup>c</sup> by whom he was to become the father of three sons and two daughters.<sup>d</sup> He had previously married a plebeian woman of his own nation,<sup>e</sup> named Doris, by whom he had his eldest son Antipater.

the effect that while Hyrcanus had the outward appearance of sovereignty, it was they who had all the power. But Herod, who was held in great honour by Antony,<sup>a</sup> came to him to defend himself against his accusers, and in this way his adversaries did not even get a chance to speak, for this service had been obtained by Herod from Antony with money. And <sup>b</sup> when Antony came to Ephesus, the high priest Hyrcanus and our nation sent an embassy to him, bringing a golden crown and requesting that he would write to the provincial governors to set free those Jews who had been taken captive by Cassius in violation of the laws of war, and restore to them the territory of which they had been deprived in the time of Cassius.<sup>c</sup> These demands Antony decided the Jews were justified in making, and so he immediately wrote to Hyrcanus and the Jews. He also sent to the Tyrians a decree <sup>d</sup> to the same effect.<sup>e</sup>

(3) <sup>f</sup> " Marcus Antonius, Imperator, to Hyrcanus, high priest and ethnarch, and to the Jewish nation,<sup>g</sup> greeting. If you are in good health, it is well. viously carried out by them in Rome, and have conscientiously discharged their present mission on behalf of you and the nation, making clear the goodwill you have for us. Being, therefore, persuaded by both deeds and words that you have the friendliest feelings for us, and being aware of your obliging and pious nature, I regard your interests as my own.<sup>a</sup> For when our adversaries and those of the Roman people overran all Asia, sparing neither cities nor temples, and disregarding the sworn agreements they had made, it was not only our own battle but that of all mankind in common that we fought when we avenged ourselves on those who were guilty both of lawless deeds against men and of unlawful acts against the gods, from which we believe the very sun turned away, as if it too were loath to look upon the foul deed against Caesar.<sup>b</sup> But their god-defying plots, which Macedonia received as though its climate were proper to their unholy crimes, and the confused mob of half-crazed villains whom they got together at Philippi in Macedonia, where<sup>c</sup> they occupied places naturally favourable and walled in by mountains as far as the sea, so that the passage<sup>d</sup> could be controlled through only one gate<sup>e</sup>—these latter part of the sentence may have read originally, "I regard it as my own concern that you have suffered injury at the hands of Cassius" or the like.

Now that these men have been punished, we hope that henceforth we shall enjoy peace and give Asia respite from war. sent you my edict, and it is my wish that you take care to register it in the public tablets in Latin and Greek characters, and, when it is written, keep it in the most conspicuous place in order that it may be read by all. 'Statement of Marcus Antonius, Imperator, one of the triumvirs appointed to govern the republic.<sup>a</sup> Whereas Gaius Cassius in the late rebellion<sup>b</sup> seized a province which did not belong to him, and after occupying it with armed forces, plundered it and our allies,<sup>c</sup> and forced the surrender of the Jewish nation, which was a friend of the Roman people, we, therefore, having overcome his madness by our arms, do establish order by our edicts and decisions in the territories plundered by him, so that they may be restored to our allies. And whatever was sold belonging to the Jews, whether persons or possessions, shall be released, the slaves to be free, as they were originally, and the possessions to be returned to their former owners. And it is my wish that whoever disobeys my edict shall be brought to trial, and if such a person is convicted, it shall be my concern to prosecute the offender in accordance with the seriousness of his act.' (xiii. 1) <sup>a</sup> When Antony afterwards came to Syria, Cleopatra met him in Cilicia <sup>b</sup> and made him a captive of love. And once again <sup>c</sup> a hundred of the most influential Jews came before him to accuse Herod and his friends, <sup>d</sup> putting forward their most skilful speakers. But Messala <sup>e</sup> spoke against them on behalf of the young men in the presence of Hyrcanus, who had by then become Herod's kinsman by marriage. <sup>f</sup> And when Antony had listened to both sides at Daphne <sup>g</sup> and inquired of Hyrcanus which were the better leaders of the nation, he replied, " Herod and his people," whereupon Antony, who had from of old been friendly with them because of the hospitable relations which he had formed with their father when he was with Gabinius, <sup>h</sup> appointed both Herod and Phasaël tetrarchs, <sup>i</sup> and entrusted to them the government of the Jews; he also wrote letters (to this effect), and put in chains fifteen of their adversaries, <sup>j</sup>

(2) Not even on their return from the embassy, however, did they remain quiet, but again a thousand men met Antony at Tyre, where he had decided to go. And as Antony had already been heavily bribed by Herod and his brother,<sup>b</sup> he ordered the local magistrate to punish the envoys of the Jews, who were bent on revolution, and to establish Herod<sup>c</sup> in power. But Herod hastily went out to them—for they<sup>d</sup> had taken up a position on the beach before the city—, and urged them, Hyrcanus being with him,<sup>e</sup> to go away, saying that great harm would befall them if they proceeded to a contest. But as they refused to take his advice, the Romans<sup>f</sup> immediately rushed upon them with their daggers and killed some and wounded a still greater number,<sup>g</sup> while the rest escaped to their homes and remained there in great terror without moving.<sup>h</sup> But when the populace cried out against Herod, Antony in a rage killed those who had been taken prisoners.

the son of the Parthian king,<sup>a</sup> and Barzaphranes,<sup>b</sup> the Parthian satrap. At the same time Ptolemy, the son of Memnacus, died,<sup>c</sup> and his son Lysanias on succeeding to his throne made a pact of friendship with Antigonus, the son of Aristobulus, in which matter he found the satrap useful, for he had great influence with him.<sup>d</sup> And Antigonus promised to give the Parthians a thousand talents and five hundred women<sup>e</sup> if they would deprive Hyrcanus of power and give it over to him, and destroy Herod and his people.<sup>f</sup> He did not in fact give them these,<sup>g</sup> but nevertheless the Parthians for the sake of these rewards marched against Judaea, bringing Antigonus back to his country; Pacorus went along the sea-coast while the satrap Barzaphranes went through the interior. Now whereas the Tyrians excluded Pacorus, the people of Sidon and Ptolemais admitted him. However, Pacorus sent out a troop of cavalry to Judaea to make a reconnaissance of the country and also to co-operate with Antigonus under the command of the cupbearer of the king, who had the same name as himself.<sup>h</sup> And as some of the Jews near Mount

<sup>e</sup> According to B.J. i. 248 it was Lysanias who promised the bribe to the Parthians. From this and similar discrepancies, Laqueur argues (unconvincingly) that Ant. shows a more intense nationalism than B.J. But in B.J. i. 257 Antigonus is cited as the one responsible for the promised bribe—a passage that Laqueur does not mention.

Carmel came to Antigonus<sup>a</sup> and were ready to join him in the invasion, Antigonus expected to take some part of the territory with their help,<sup>b</sup> namely, the place called The Grove (Drymoi)<sup>c</sup>; and although some opponents engaged them, these men got away to Jerusalem,<sup>d</sup> and on being joined by others, formed a large body and came against the palace, which they proceeded to besiege. But Phasael and Herod<sup>e</sup> came to the assistance of the besieged, and in the battle which was fought in the market-place the young men<sup>f</sup> defeated the enemy; and after pursuing them into the temple, they sent some soldiers<sup>g</sup> to the adjacent houses to guard them, but as the soldiers were left without reinforcements,<sup>h</sup> the people rose against them and burnt them to death in the houses. For this outrage Herod, however, soon afterwards took vengeance on his adversaries, and engaging them in battle, killed many of them.

(1) During the daily skirmishes that took place the enemy were waiting for the arrival of the multitude from the country<sup>i</sup> who were coming for the celebration of Pentecost, as it is called, which is a festival. And when this day came, there were many tens of thousands of armed and unarmed men gathered

p. 111 n. 74). Avi Yonah, p. 18, identifies it more closely as a wood near Arsūf (Apollonia).

round the temple. The newcomers held the temple and the city except for the palace and its environs, for these Herod was protecting with a few soldiers. And so, while Phasael guarded the wall, Herod with a company attacked the enemy in the suburbs and after a stout fight routed many tens of thousands <sup>a</sup>; some of them fled to the city, others to the temple, and still others to some outer ramparts which were there. And Phasael also gave him assistance. Thereupon Pacorus, the Parthian general,<sup>b</sup> at Antigonus' request came to the city with a few horsemen,<sup>c</sup> ostensibly to put an end to the uprising, but in reality to help Antigonus obtain power. And when Phasael met him and received him hospitably,<sup>d</sup> Pacorus persuaded him to go on an embassy himself to Barzaphranes, for this was part of a plot he had devised against him. Phasael, suspecting nothing, let himself be persuaded although Herod did not approve of what was being done because of the faithlessness of the barbarians, and advised him, instead, to attack Pacorus and the others who had come.<sup>e</sup>

(5) And so Hyrcanus and Phasael went off on the embassy, and Pacorus escorted them, leaving with Herod two hundred<sup>f</sup> horsemen and ten of the Free-men,<sup>g</sup> as they were called. But when they came to

<sup>a</sup> Text uncertain; the variant has "those who were in command of the cities"; for "were stationed" Reinach conjectures, from B.J., "those of the enemy who were in revolt."

Galilee, those of the enemy who were stationed in that region<sup>a</sup> met them with arms. And though Barzaphranes at first received them cordially and gave them gifts, he then began to plot against them. Phasaël and his party were thereupon brought to Ecdippa<sup>b</sup> overlooking the sea; and when they there heard that Antigonus had promised the Parthians a thousand talents and five hundred women at their expense,<sup>c</sup> they now had suspicions of the barbarians. Furthermore someone informed them that a plot was being hatched against them to be carried out by night, and that an unseen guard was placed round them; and they would have been seized had it not been that the enemy were waiting until the Parthians at Jerusalem should have seized Herod lest upon their doing away with the envoys first, Herod should learn of it and escape. And these reports were actually so, and their guards were seen. Accordingly some of the men urged Phasaël to mount his horse immediately and not wait any longer; especially was he pressed to do this by Ophellius, who had heard these things from Saramalla, at that time the wealthiest man in Syria, and he promised him boats for his flight, for the sea was near.<sup>d</sup> Phasaël, however, did not think it right to desert Hyrcanus or to endanger his brother<sup>e</sup>; but he went to Barzaphranes and told him that he was doing the wrong thing in forming such plots<sup>a</sup> against them, for if it was money he wanted, he would get more from him (Phasaël) than Antigonus was giving him, and that in any case it was a terrible thing to kill envoys who had come to him trustfully and were doing no wrong.<sup>b</sup> But in reply to this speech the barbarian swore that there was no truth in these suspicions and that, on the contrary, the suspicions that disturbed Phasaël were false; he then went off to join Pacorus.<sup>c</sup>

(6) But when he had gone, some of the Parthians put Hyrcanus and Phasaël in chains, and they<sup>d</sup> bitterly reviled the Parthians for their perfidy. Now the cup-bearer<sup>e</sup> who had been sent to Herod had orders to lead him outside the walls and seize him. But fortunately messengers had been sent by Phasaël to inform him of the faithlessness of the Parthians; and so, when Herod learned that the enemy had seized them, he went to Pacorus<sup>f</sup> and the influential Parthians as the masters of the others. But they, although they knew everything, deceitfully pretended innocence and said that he should go with them before the wall in order to meet the bearers of letters, for they had not yet been seized by their adversaries but had come with a report of all that Phasaël had accomplished. Herod, however, did not believe them, for he had heard from others of his brother's capture; and at the prompting of Hyrcanus' daughter.<sup>a</sup> to whose daughter he was betrothed, he became still more suspicious of the Parthians. Now though the others paid no attention to her, he himself had faith in her as a very sensible woman.

(7) While the Parthians deliberated what they should do—for they did not like the idea of openly attacking so powerful a man—and postponed the matter to the next day, Herod, who was in great perturbation and gave more weight to what he had heard about his brother and the Parthians' plot than to the other side, decided when evening came to take this opportunity to flee and not to delay as if there were some uncertainty of danger from the enemy.<sup>b</sup> Accordingly he set out with those soldiers whom he had there, and mounted the women on beasts of burden, including his mother and sister and the daughter of Alexander, the son of Aristobulus, whom he was to marry, and her mother, who was a daughter of Hyrcanus; he also took his youngest brother and all the servants and the rest of the crowd that was with them, and unknown to the enemy followed the road to Idumaea.<sup>c</sup> And no enemy would have been found so hard of heart that on witnessing what was taking place at that time he would not have pitied their fate as the wretched women led their infants and with tears and wailing left behind their native either "Mariamme" is a gloss or the text should read "the daughter of Hyrcanus and the mother of Mariamme," since the description of the woman fits the mother better than the daughter, as Dr. Thackeray points out in his note on the parallel in B.J.

(8) Nevertheless Herod let his spirit rise above the blow caused by this misfortune, and being himself of good courage<sup>b</sup> in the face of misfortune, went to the others along the road and urged each of them also to have courage and not give himself wholly over to grief, for this, he said, would hinder them in their flight, in which alone their safety lay. And so at Herod's exhortation they tried to bear their troubles. But once when a wagon overturned and his mother was in danger of death, he was near to taking his own life because of his anguish on her account and his fear that as a result of the delay caused by the overturn the enemy might overtake them in pursuit. Indeed he had drawn his sword and was about to stab himself when those about him restrained him and prevailed upon him by their number and also by telling him that it was not right for him to abandon them and leave them in the power of their foes, for it was not the act of a noble man to free himself from danger and disregard that of his friends. And so, being forced to desist from his rash act against himself by shame at their words and by the number of those who stayed his hand from carrying out his plan, he revived his mother and procured for her such care as was possible in the short time at his disposal, and continued on his way, making the journey to the fortress of Masada<sup>c</sup> at great speed. (9) But during his flight he was not safe from the Jews either, for they too attacked his party when they were sixty<sup>a</sup> stades from the city and engaged them in hand to hand combat along the road; but these too he routed and crushed as if he were in no such helpless and difficult position<sup>b</sup> but were excellently prepared for war and had a great advantage; and later when he became king, he built a wonderful palace on the spot where he defeated the Jews, and founded a city round it,<sup>c</sup> which he called Herodia.<sup>d</sup> Now when he came to a place in Idumaea called Oresa,<sup>e</sup> he was met by his brother Joseph, and he held a council to see what he must do about his general situation, for a great number of people, apart from his mercenaries, accompanied him, and the fortress of Masada, in which he proposed to take refuge, was too small to hold so great a crowd. He therefore sent most of them away, numbering over nine thousand, and told them to seek safety in flight to various places in Idumaea, and gave them provisions for the journey. Those, however, who were lightly armed and his nearest relatives he took with him and reached the fortress, where he left the women and their followers, who numbered some eight hundred, for*there was sufficient grain and water and other necessities in the place ; and he himself set out for Petra in Arabia. But when day came, the Parthians plundered all the possessions of the people of Jerusalem, as well as the palace, leaving untouched only the funds of Hyrcanus, which amounted to three hundred<sup>a</sup> talents. Much of Herod's property, however, escaped, especially all that with his usual foresight he had succeeded in removing beforehand to Idumaea.<sup>b</sup> But the Parthians were not satisfied with what they found in the city, and so they went out and ravaged the Jews' country as well, and also destroyed the important city of Marisa.<sup>c</sup>

(10) In this way was Antigonus brought back to Judaea by the Parthian king and took over Hyrcanus and Phasaël as prisoners. He was, however, very despondent over the escape of the women whom he had planned to give to the enemy, for this was the reward he had promised them together with money.<sup>d</sup> And being fearful that the people might restore Hyrcanus to the throne, he went up to him where he was being guarded by the Parthians,<sup>e</sup> and cut off his ears,<sup>f</sup> thus taking care that the high priesthood

should never come to him another time, because he was now mutilated, and the law requires that this office should belong only to those who are sound of body.<sup>a</sup> As for Phasaël, one must admire his courage, for though he knew that he was marked for slaughter, he did not look upon death as terrible in itself but believed that it was a most bitter and shameful thing to suffer at the hands of a foe; and so, not having his hands free to destroy himself because of his chains, he dashed his head against a rock and removed himself from the world of the living, which he thought was the best thing to do in view of his helpless position, and thus he deprived the enemy of the power of killing him as they pleased. But some say that when he had incurred this serious wound, Antigonus quietly sent physicians as if to heal it, and had him killed by deadly poisons which they applied to his wound.<sup>b</sup> However, before he breathed his last, Phasaël heard from some woman that his brother Herod had escaped the enemy, and so he bore his death with cheerfulness, for he left behind one who would avenge his death and was able to punish his foes.<sup>c</sup>

(xiv. 1) <sup>d</sup> Herod, however, was not discouraged by the magnitude of the dangers that encompassed him; instead they made him the keener in attempting <sup>e</sup> perilous deeds. the Arab king, who had previously received many benefits from him,<sup>a</sup> in order to receive a return and to get money, which was what he most needed, either as a loan or as a gift from one who had obtained many sums from him. For as he did not know what had happened to his brother, he was in haste to ransom him from the enemy, being ready to pay as his ransom as much as three hundred talents in coin. And for this purpose he also took along Phasaël's son, who was seven years old, to offer him as security to the Arabs.<sup>b</sup> But he was met by messengers from Malchus, who through them ordered Herod to retire, for the Parthians, he said, had instructed him not to receive Herod; this he used as a pretext for not repaying his debts, and the influential Arabs urged him on to this in order that they might withhold from Herod the sums which they had received in deposit from Antipater. Thereupon he replied to them that he had come to them with no thought of making trouble but only to discuss matters which were of the greatest importance to him.<sup>c</sup>

went to Rome where he first of all related to Antony<sup>a</sup> what had befallen him in Judaea, and how his brother Phasaël had been seized by the Parthians and put to death, and that Hyrcanus was being held a prisoner by them, and that they had set up Antigonus as king after his promise to give them a thousand talents and five hundred women, who were to be of the first families and of their own race,<sup>b</sup> and that he had removed the women by night and had escaped from the hands of his foes after enduring many hardships. Then he said<sup>c</sup> that his relatives shared his danger by being besieged, and told how he had sailed through a storm, and how he had made light of every danger in his haste to reach Antony, in whom lay his hope and only help.

(4) Antony was moved to pity by the reverses of Herod, and indulged in the familiar reflection concerning those who are placed in so high a station, that they too are subject to the rule of fortune; and partly in memory of Antipater's hospitality,<sup>d</sup> partly because of the money which Herod promised to give him if he became king,<sup>e</sup> as he had promised once before when he was appointed tetrarch,<sup>f</sup> but chiefly because of his hatred of Antigonus—for he considered him and the marriage of Antony to Octavian's sister Octavia (November).

a seditious person and an enemy of the Romans <sup>a</sup>— he was eager to give Herod the assistance he asked for. As for Caesar, <sup>b</sup> because of the campaigns in Egypt on which Antipater had served with his father, <sup>c</sup> and his hospitality and goodwill at all times, and also as a favour to Antony, who was very zealous on Herod's behalf, he was more ready to grant this rank and to co-operate in the things which Herod wished. <sup>d</sup> And so Messala <sup>e</sup> and Atratinus <sup>f</sup> after him convened the Senate, and presenting Herod, dwelt on the good deeds of his father, and recalled the loyalty which Herod himself had shown toward the Romans : at the same time they brought accusations against Antigonus, whom they declared an enemy, not only because of the first offence he had committed against them <sup>g</sup> but because he had received his kingly title from the Parthians, thus showing no regard for the Romans. And when the Senate had been aroused by these charges, Antony came forward and informed them that it was also an advantage in their war with the Parthians that Herod should be king. And as this proposal was acceptable to all, they voted accordingly. <sup>h</sup>

Aristobulus (III) is meant.

(5) <sup>a</sup> But this was the greatest sign of Antony's devotion to Herod, that not only did he obtain the kingship for him, which he had not hoped for—he had come to the capital not to claim the kingship for himself, for he did not believe the Romans would offer it to him, since it was their custom to give it to one of the reigning family, but to claim it for his wife's brother,<sup>b</sup> who was a grandson of Aristobulus on his father's side and of Hyrcanus on his mother's<sup>c</sup>—but he also made it possible for Herod in only seven days altogether to obtain these unexpected grants and leave Italy.<sup>d</sup> This youth, however, Herod put to death, as we shall relate at the proper time.<sup>e</sup> Now when the Senate was adjourned, Antony and Caesar went out with Herod between them, and the consuls and other magistrates leading the way, in order to sacrifice and to deposit the decree in the Capitol. Then Antony entertained him on the first day of his reign. Thus did Herod take over royal power, receiving it in the hundred and eighty-fourth

<sup>d</sup> Otto, Herodes, p. 28, expresses scepticism about Herod's original intention of claiming the throne for Aristobulus, not for himself, on the ground that Herod was in Italy so short a time; he sees in this passage an attempt to clear Herod of overweening ambition. On the other hand, Laqueur, pp. 195-199, in the interest of his theory about the anti-Herodian alterations and additions in Ant., resorts to a rather artificial explanation of secondary changes in Ant. to make the point that far from clearing Herod here, Josephus is criticising him for making use of Aristobulus in the belief that the Roman policy of retaining the reigning dynasty would make his own appointment as king impossible. Laqueur combines §§ 386-388 with 403-405 and 489 as anti-Herodian revisions of Josephus' source, here supposedly the memoirs of Herod himself.

(6) <sup>b</sup> All this time Antigonus was besieging those in Masada, who had all other necessary provisions and lacked only water<sup>c</sup>; on this account Herod's brother Joseph planned to flee with two hundred of his people to the Arabs, for he had heard that Malchus regretted the wrongs which he had done Herod.<sup>d</sup> But he was stopped by a rain which God sent in the night, for once the cisterns were filled with water, they no longer needed to flee; instead, they were now encouraged, not merely because they had an abundance of what they had lacked before, but rather because this seemed an act of God's providence<sup>e</sup>; and so they sallied out, and engaging Antigonus' men, sometimes openly and sometimes from under cover, destroyed many of them.<sup>f</sup> Meanwhile Ventidius,<sup>g</sup> the Roman general sent from Syria to keep back the Parthians, after disposing of them,<sup>h</sup> made a side-march into Judaea, ostensibly to give aid to Joseph, but in reality the whole business was a device to obtain money from Antigonus; at any rate he encamped very near Jerusalem and extorted from Antigonus as much money as he wanted. Then he himself withdrew with the greater part of his force; but in order that his extortion <sup>a</sup> might not be detected, he left Silo <sup>b</sup> behind with a certain number of soldiers; to him also Antigonus paid court in order that he might not cause any trouble, hoping at the same time that the Parthians would once more give him help.

(xv. 1) By this time Herod had sailed from Italy <sup>c</sup> to Ptolemais and had collected a not inconsiderable force of both foreigners and his countrymen, and was marching through Galilee against Antigonus. And he was supported by Silo and Ventidius, for they had been persuaded by Dellius, <sup>d</sup> who had been sent by Antony, to join in restoring Herod to his country. And so while Ventidius was quieting the disturbances that had been created in the cities by the Parthians, Silo remained in Judaea, having been corrupted by bribes from Antigonus. Nevertheless Herod's strength increased day by day as he went forward, and all Galilee, except for a few of its inhabitants, came over to his side. But when he set out to reach those in Masada—for it was essential to save the people who were being besieged in the fortress, since they were his relatives—he found Joppa in his way, and as it was hostile to him, he had first to capture it in order that no stronghold should be left on his rear in the enemy's hands while he was moving on Jerusalem. But as Silo made this a pretext for departing, and the Jews pursued him, Herod fell upon them with a small body of men and routed them, and so saved Silo, who was defending himself feebly ; and after taking Joppa he hastened to rescue his relatives in Masada. Thereupon the local inhabitants joined him, some because of their friendship with his father,<sup>a</sup> others because of his reputation, and still others as a return for benefits received from both of them, but the majority because of the hopes which they placed in him as one who would thereafter have a secure position as king.

(2) Thus a strong force had been collected, and as it advanced, Antigonus occupied the most suitable places for passage with snares and ambushes, but did not the least, or at best only slight, damage thereby to the enemy. Then Herod having recovered his relatives from Masada and taken the fortress of Oresa,<sup>b</sup> went on to Jerusalem, where he was joined<sup>c</sup> by Silo's army and many from the city who were intimidated by his strength. When he encamped on the western side of the city, the guards who had been stationed in this quarter hurled javelins and shot arrows at them, while some ran out in a compact body and fought hand to hand with his front-line men ; but Herod gave orders that his men should first make a proclamation before the wall that he had come for the good of the citizens and the welfare of the city, bearing no grudge even against those who were openly his foes, but, on the contrary, being ready to forget the offences which his most determined adversaries had committed against him. But Antigonus in answer to Herod's proclamation told Silo and the Roman army that it would be contrary to their own notion of right if they gave the kingship to Herod who was a commoner and an Idumæan, that is, a half-Jew, when they ought to offer it to those who were of the (royal) family, as was their custom. And, he argued, if they were now ill-disposed toward him and were determined to deprive him of the kingship on the ground that he had received it from the Parthians, there were at least many of his family who might lawfully receive the kingship, for they had committed no offence against the Romans, and were priests; and thus they would be unworthily treated if they were deprived of this rank.<sup>a</sup> Such things they said to one another and were proceeding to imprecations when Antigonus permitted his men to battle with Herod's men from the wall.<sup>b</sup> But the enemy shot their arrows and opposed them with so much spirit that they easily drove them from the towers.

(3) Then it was that Silo showed openly that he had taken a bribe<sup>c</sup>; for he got a good many of his own soldiers to cry aloud about the lack of provisions, to demand money for food, and to insist that they be taken to suitable quarters for wintering, since the region about the city was a waste as a result of the merely that "Antigonus issued counter-exhortations forbidding any to listen to these proclamations (of Herod) or to go over to the enemy." See above, § 387 note d, § 390 note b.

ravaging by Antigonus' soldiers; and so he began to move his camp and attempted to withdraw. But Herod persisted in urging the officers under Silo and their soldiers not to desert him, for Caesar as well as Antony and the Senate had given him encouragement<sup>a</sup>: he would, he said, take care that they should have plenty of provisions, and would readily furnish them with an abundance of the things they wanted. After making this plea he at once set out into the country and left Silo no longer any pretext for withdrawing, for he brought back a greater mass of provisions than anyone had hoped for, and also instructed those around Samaria who had become friendly toward him<sup>b</sup> to bring down to Jericho grain, wine, oil, cattle and all other things in order that there should be no lack of supplies for the soldiers for some days to come. But these activities did not remain unknown to Antigonus, who at once sent off men throughout the country to obstruct and waylay those who were collecting food; and in obedience to Antigonus' orders they mustered a large body of armed men near Jericho, and taking up posts in the hills, kept a look-out for the men who were bringing provisions. Herod, however, did not remain still while this was being done, but took ten cohorts, five Roman and five Jewish, and a mixed mercenary force, to which he added a few mounted men, and marched on Jericho; and while he found the city deserted, he seized five hundred men occupying the heights with their wives and families, but after capturing them, released them; then the Romans fell upon the city and plundered it, finding the houses full of all kinds of valuable things. And after leaving a garrison at Jericho, the king returned and dismissed his Roman army to their winter quarters in the districts which had joined his side,<sup>a</sup> namely Idumaea,<sup>b</sup> Galilee and Samaria. At the same time Antigonus through bribery obtained Silo's consent to quarter a part of his army in Lydda,<sup>c</sup> seeking to win Antony's favour thereby. And so the Romans put aside their arms and lived on the fat of the land.<sup>d</sup>

(4) Herod, however, did not choose to remain inactive, but sent off his brother Joseph to Idumaea with two thousand foot-soldiers and four hundred mounted men,<sup>e</sup> while he himself went to Samaria, where he left his mother and his other relatives, who had by now made their way out of Masada, and proceeded to Galilee to capture some of the strongholds which had been occupied by the garrisons of Antigonus. He reached Sepphoris in a snow-storm, and as Antigonus' garrison had quietly withdrawn, he came into possession of an abundance of provisions. From here he then sent out a troop of cavalry and three companies of foot-soldiers against some brigands living in caves, for he had made up his mind to put an end to their depredations<sup>f</sup>; these caves were very

<sup>a</sup> Mod. Khirbet Irbid, a few miles W. of the Sea of Galilee and N.W. of Tiberias, cf. Ant. xii. 421 note a. In Vita 188 Josephus calls the place "the Cave of Arbela." The ruins near a village called Arbela.<sup>a</sup> Forty days later he himself came with his entire army, and under the enemy's bold<sup>b</sup> attack the left wing of his line gave way, but when he appeared in person with a compact body of men,<sup>c</sup> he put to flight those who had before been victorious, and rallied those of his men who were fleeing. And he pressed on in pursuit of the enemy as far as the river Jordan, to which they fled along different<sup>d</sup> roads<sup>e</sup>; and so he got into his hands all the people of Galilee except those who lived in the caves<sup>f</sup>; he then distributed money, giving each of his men a hundred and fifty drachmas, and considerably more to the officers, and dismissed them to their winter quarters. Meanwhile Silo and the officers of the men who were in winter quarters came to him because Antigonus was unwilling to furnish them with food; that worthy had fed them for a month and no longer; he had, moreover, sent out orders to the inhabitants round about that they were to gather up all the provisions throughout the country and flee to the hills in order that the Romans might be entirely without necessary food and so perish of hunger. Accordingly Herod entrusted the care of these men to Pheroras, his youngest brother, and ordered him to fortify Alexandreion also. And he quickly made it possible for the soldiers to have of a later synagogue may still be seen there, cf. E. Sukenik in JPOS 15 (1935), p. 143.

<sup>a</sup> Nothing is said about Silo or Antigonus in the parallel, B.J. i. 308, which says merely that Pheroras was instructed to take charge of the commissariat (ἀγορά) of Herod's army and to fortify Alexandreion (see above, § 92). Laqueur, 668 an abundance of the necessary provisions, and also restored Alexandreion, which had been left in ruins.<sup>a</sup>

(5) About the same time, while Antony was staying at Athens,<sup>b</sup> Ventidius in Syria sent for Silo to join him against the Parthians,<sup>c</sup> but instructed him first to assist Herod in the present war and then summon their allies to the Romans' own war. But Herod, who was hastening against the brigands in the caves, sent <sup>d</sup> Silo off to Ventidius, and set out against them by himself. Now their caves were in hills that were altogether rugged, having their entrances half-way up the sheer cliffs and being surrounded by sharp rocks; in such dens did they lurk with all their people. Thereupon<sup>e</sup> the king, whose men were unable either to climb up from below or creep upon them from above because of the steepness of the hill, had cribs built and lowered these upon them with iron chains as they were suspended by a machine from the summit of the hill. The cribs were filled with armed men holding great grappling hooks, with which they were supposed to draw toward them any of the brigands who opposed them, and kill them by hurling them to the ground. The lowering of the cribs was proving to be a risky business because of the immense depth that lay below them, although the men within them had everything they needed. But when the cribs were let down, none of the men standing near the entrances of the caves dared come forward; instead, they remained quiet out of fear, whereupon one of the soldiers in irritation at the delay caused by the brigands who dared not come out, girded on his sword, and holding on with both hands to the chain from which the crib was suspended, lowered himself to the entrance of a cave. And when he came opposite an entrance, he first drove back with javelins most of those who were standing there, and then with his grappling hook drew his opponents toward him and pushed them over the precipice; after this he attacked those within and slaughtered many of them, whereupon he re-entered the crib and rested. Then fear seized the others as they heard the shrieking, and they despaired of their lives; all action, however, was halted by the coming on of night<sup>a</sup>; and many, after sending spokesmen with the king's consent,<sup>b</sup> surrendered and made their submission.<sup>c</sup> The same method of attack was used the following day, when the men in the baskets<sup>d</sup> fell upon them still more fiercely and fought at their doors and threw flaming fire inside, and so the caves, which had much wood in them, were set on fire. Now there was an old man shut up within one of the caves with his seven children and his wife: and when they begged him to let them slip through to the enemy, he stood at the entrance and cut down each of his sons as he came out, and afterwards his wife, and after hurling their dead bodies over the precipice, threw himself down upon them, thus submitting to death rather than to slavery. But before doing so, he bitterly reviled Herod for his meanness of spirit, although the king—for he was a witness of what was happening—stretched out his right hand and promised him full immunity. By such methods, then, all the caves were finally taken.

(6) The king thereupon appointed Ptolemy general in that region, and departed for Samaria with six hundred mounted men and three thousand foot-soldiers to try the issue of battle with Antigonus. Ptolemy, however, was unsuccessful in his command, and the men who had formerly disturbed Galilee fell upon him and took his life; after doing this, they fled in a body to the marshes and other inaccessible places, harrying and plundering the entire country thereabout. But Herod returned and punished them; some of the rebels he slew, and those who had taken refuge in fortified places he subjected to a siege and killed, and demolished their strongholds as well. After putting an end to the rebellion in this way, he also fined the cities a hundred talents.

The Roman general Machaeras gives Herod ground for complaint.

<sup>b</sup> The preceding account of Machaeras' actions differs in some important details from the parallel, B.J. i. 317-319, which says that Antigonos, complaining bitterly of Herod, tried to bribe Machaeras, but the bribe was refused because Machaeras respected the orders of Ventidius and was also tempted by a larger bribe offered by Herod; after being repulsed by Antigonos, Machaeras in shame (nothing is said of his belated recognition of the soundness of Herod's advice)

Now Machaeras, being invited by Antigonus and bribed by him, went off against Herod's wish, as if to reconnoitre his position; but Antigonus, suspecting his intentions in coming, did not admit him, but kept him away with sling-shots, and so revealed his own purpose. Thereupon Machaeras, perceiving that Herod had given him excellent advice and that he himself had made a mistake in disregarding his counsel, withdrew to the city of Emmaus<sup>a</sup> and slaughtered all the Jews whom he met on the way, whether friends or foes, in anger at the treatment he had suffered.<sup>b</sup> Enraged at these acts, the king went to Samaria, for he had decided to go to Antony about these matters and say that he had no need of such allies, who would do more harm to him than to his enemies, and that he was quite able to crush Antigonus by himself.<sup>c</sup> But Machaeras, who accompanied him, begged him to remain, or, if he were bent on going, at least to leave his brother Joseph as their associate in the war with Antigonus.<sup>d</sup> And so, at was forced to retire to Emmaus and rejoin Herod, on the way killing all the Jews he met, not sparing even the Herodians. Otto, Herodes, p. 31 note, assumes that in Ant. Josephus used two contradictory sources, while Laqueur, pp. 202-205, argues that Josephus has tendentiously altered B.J. in writing Ant. out of hostility to Antigonus (while still being hostile to his opponent Herod). But so far as Antigonus is concerned the only difference between B.J. and Ant. is that in the former he tries to bribe Machaeras unsuccessfully, and in the latter succeeds in bribing him. Thus the alleged anti-Antigonus revision of Ant. is not very clear.

(8) <sup>b</sup> He himself hastened to Antony, who was just then besieging Samosata, a place near the Euphrates, with horsemen and foot-soldiers who had come to his assistance.<sup>c</sup> When he arrived at Antioch,<sup>d</sup> he found many men gathered there who were anxious to reach Antony but dared not set out for fear of the barbarians who were attacking men on the way and slaying many of them: these he encouraged and became their leader on the road. But two days' march from Samosata <sup>e</sup> there was an ambush of barbarians lying in wait for those who were on their way to Antony. And as there were thickets covering the entrance to the plains, they had there placed in ambush <sup>f</sup> not a few horsemen to remain quiet until those passing through should reach the place where see Laqueur, pp. 205-210, who assumes that in Ant. Josephus used a second source beside Nicolas of Damascus, namely the Memoirs of Herod himself. But this assumption seems to contradict Laqueur's theory that Ant. is more anti-Herodian than B.J.

<sup>c</sup> Antony had come to supersede Ventidius who was besieging the Parthians' ally Antiochus of Commagene. For the ancient sources see W. W. Tarn in CAH x. 53 note 3 and Debevoise, p. 120 note 103.

horses could be used. As the first men went through, Herod was guarding the rear, and when the men in ambush, numbering some five hundred, suddenly<sup>a</sup> fell upon them and routed those in front, the king rushed up and by the force of his charge at once drove the enemy back; at the same time he raised the spirits of his men and filled them with courage: and when those who had before been fleeing turned back to fight, the barbarians were killed on all sides. But the king pressed on, slaying as he went, and after recovering all the plunder that had been taken, consisting of a great many pack-animals and slaves, he went ahead. And being attacked by a larger number of men in the thickets near the entrance to the plain, he engaged them too with a stout body of men and routed and killed many of them, thus making the road safe for those who followed. Thereupon they hailed him as their saviour and protector.

(9) And when he came near Samosata, Antony sent his army with his own equipment to meet him, assigning these men as an honour to Herod and also as an aid to him; for he had heard of the barbarians' attacks upon them. Moreover when Herod arrived, he was very glad to see him, and on learning of his feats on the way, he clasped his hand and expressed admiration of his prowess; and Antony himself welcomed him with an embrace on seeing him,<sup>b</sup> and showed him special honour, for he had recently appointed him king.<sup>c</sup> But not long afterwards

Antiochus<sup>a</sup> surrendered the stronghold,<sup>b</sup> and thus the war came to an end; thereupon Antony entrusted Syria<sup>c</sup> to Sossius with instructions to aid Herod, and himself departed for Egypt.<sup>d</sup> And so Sossius sent two legions ahead to Judaea to assist Herod,<sup>e</sup> and himself followed with the greater part of his army.

(10) Before this, however, Joseph had met his death in Judaea under the following circumstances. Forgetting the orders which his brother had given him when going off to Antony, he pitched camp in the hills—for when Machaeras gave him five cohorts, he hastened to Jericho with the intention of reaping all their grain—and as the Roman army was newly recruited and had no experience of war, being raised mostly from Syria, he was left in a difficult position when the enemy attacked him there, and so he was killed, fighting bravely; his entire army was also lost, six cohorts being destroyed.<sup>f</sup> And Antigonus seized the dead bodies<sup>g</sup> and cut off Joseph's head, which his brother Pheroras ransomed for fifty talents. And after this the Galilaeans rebelled against the nobles in their country and drowned the partisans

<sup>d</sup> According to Plutarch, loc. cit., Antony returned to Athens from Syria. In B.J. the instructions to Sossius are mentioned after the account of Joseph's defeat at Jericho, instead of before it, as here; § 447 = B.J. i. 327, while §§ 448-450 = B.J. i. 323-326.

<sup>b</sup> B.J. has "Idumaea," probably the correct reading since, as Otto points out, Herodes, p. 32, Judaea had not been held by Herod, while, according to B.J. i. 303, he had earlier feared a revolt in Idumaea.

of Herod in the lake <sup>a</sup> : a good part of Judaea <sup>b</sup> also revolted. Machaeras then fortified the place called Gittha.<sup>c</sup>

(11) But messengers came to the king to report these happenings, and at Daphne near Antioch they informed him of his brother's fate, which, however, he himself was expecting from certain dream visions which clearly foreshadowed his brother's death.<sup>d</sup> He therefore hastened on his way, and when he came to Mount Lebanon, took on eight hundred men of that region, and with a Roman legion as well came to Ptolemais ; from there he set out by night with his army and proceeded through Galilee.<sup>e</sup> When the enemy met him, they were defeated in battle and were shut up in the fortress from which they had set out the day before ; he then attacked them repeatedly at dawn,<sup>f</sup> but not being able to do anything because of a severe storm which broke out, he led his army back to the villages nearby. But when a second legion came to him from Antony,<sup>g</sup> the men who were holding the fortress were terrified and abandoned it by night. And the king hastened to Jericho with the intention of taking revenge on them for his brother. And when he had found quarters, he entertained the men in authority, and after the party, sent away the guests and went to his room. And from the following incident one may see how well disposed God was toward the king.<sup>a</sup> For the roof of the house collapsed<sup>b</sup> without killing anyone who was caught within; so that they all believed that Herod was a favourite of God for having escaped so great and unexpected a danger.

(12) On the following day, however, six thousand of the enemy descended from the summits of the hills to fight, and struck terror into the Romans.<sup>c</sup> The light-armed troops came close and cast javelins<sup>d</sup> and stones at the king's men who had come out against them, and one of them struck the king himself in the side with a javelin. Antigonus then sent a general named Pappus with a force<sup>e</sup> to Samaria, wishing to give the enemy the impression that he was fighting with men to spare. And while he occupied himself with the general Machaeras, Herod took five cities, and after slaughtering those who were caught<sup>f</sup> in them—about two thousand—and burning the cities themselves, returned to face Pappus, who had pitched his camp near a village called Isana.<sup>g</sup>

<sup>c</sup> B.J. i. 332 says, on the contrary, that Antigonus' troops had not the courage to come to close quarters with the Romans. Possibly in Ant. we should read, not ἐφόβουν, but ἐφοβοῦντο (τοὺς Ῥωμαίους) "but they were afraid of the Romans."<sup>d</sup> Text slightly emended.

<sup>a</sup> Variant "from Jericho and Judaea"; B.J. "from Jericho and the rest of the country (χώρας)"—probably meaning Judaea. B.J. adds that these recruits came, "some drawn by hatred of Antigonos, others by his own successes, the majority by a blind love of change."

Meanwhile many people streamed to him from Jericho and the rest of Judaea <sup>a</sup>; and when he drew near the enemy, they boldly advanced to attack him, but on engaging them in battle he overcame them, and to avenge his brother <sup>b</sup> he followed and killed them as they fled to the village. The houses were filled with armed men, and many <sup>c</sup> took refuge on the house-tops, but he seized these, and on pulling down the roofs of the houses, saw the space below filled with soldiers wedged in tightly together. Accordingly his men hurled stones at them from above <sup>d</sup> and slew them in heaps, one upon another. And the most terrible sight of any during the war was this mass of countless dead bodies lying one upon another within the walls of the houses. <sup>e</sup> It was this action which did most to break the spirits of the enemy, who were waiting to see what would happen; for great crowds were seen coming together from a distance about the village, and they now fled; and if a severe storm <sup>f</sup> had not prevented, the king's army, made confident by their victory, would have marched on Jerusalem as well and ended the whole business; for Antigonus was already considering headlong flight and withdrawal from the city.

<sup>e</sup> τοίχων "house-walls" is conjectured for MSS. τειχῶν "city-walls." A conjectured variant is "outside" for MSS. "within." B.J. has "there was such a heap of corpses that the streets were impassable."

(13) <sup>a</sup> At this point the king ordered his soldiers to have their supper, as it was late, and he himself, being tired out, went into a room to bathe. And here he came into very great danger, but by the providence of God, escaped it. For he was naked <sup>b</sup> and taking his bath, with only a single servant in attendance, in an inner chamber, where several of the enemy, who were armed, had taken refuge out of fear: and while he was bathing, one of them stole by <sup>c</sup> with his sword drawn, and went out through the door, and after him a second and a third who were similarly armed, but in their consternation they did the king no injury, and were content to have got away into the open without suffering any harm. The following day he cut off the head of Pappus, who had already been slain, and sent it to Pheroras in revenge for what his brother had suffered. For it was Pappus who had been his executioner.<sup>d</sup>

He then put capable men in charge of these works, and while his army was still encamped, himself went off to Samaria to marry the daughter <sup>a</sup> of Alexander, son of Aristobulus, to whom he was betrothed, as I have said before.<sup>b</sup>

(xvi. 1) After the wedding Sossius, who had sent his forces ahead through the interior, came through Phoenicia, the general himself coming <sup>c</sup> with a large number of horsemen and foot-soldiers. And the king also arrived from Samaria, leading a considerable army in addition to the one he had earlier, there being about thirty thousand.<sup>d</sup> All these assembled before the wall of Jerusalem and took up their position at the north wall of the city; they made up an army of eleven divisions of foot-soldiers and six thousand mounted men, as well as auxiliaries from Syria<sup>e</sup>; and there were two commanders, Sossius, who had been sent as an ally by Antony, and Herod, acting on his own behalf, to take the royal power from Antigonus, who had been declared an enemy at Rome,<sup>f</sup> and in his stead to become king himself in accordance with the decree of the Senate.

nation<sup>a</sup> being gathered together, that the Jews who were confined<sup>b</sup> within the walls fought against Herod and his men; many were the invocations made about the temple, and many were the things said to encourage<sup>c</sup> the people, to the effect that God would deliver them from danger. And everything on the land outside the city<sup>d</sup> had been carried off, so that nothing was left that might serve as food for men or beasts; and by secret raids also they caused a lack of provisions. But<sup>e</sup> when Herod observed this, he took steps against the raids, on the one hand, by posting ambushes in the most suitable places, and against the lack of provisions, on the other hand, by sending divisions of armed men to gather supplies from a distance, so that within a short time they had a great abundance of necessities. And the three lines of earthworks had been raised with ease, for there were a great number of hands now continuously<sup>f</sup> at work, and as it was summer,<sup>g</sup> there was no hindrance to their erection either from the weather or from the workmen; and so they brought up their engines and battered the wall, trying every expedient. They did not, however, intimidate those within the city, who on their part contrived a good many counter-devices against those of their enemies; they would dash out and set fire to their works, some of them half-finished, others completed; they would also fight hand to hand, but while they were not inferior to the Romans in daring, they fell short of them in science. Against the siege-engines they devised counter-defences when their first constructions gave way, and fought underground when they met the enemy in the mines; and acting in desperation rather than with foresight, they persevered in the war to the very end—this in spite of the fact that a great army surrounded them and that they were distressed by famine and the lack of necessities, for a sabbatical year happened to fall at that time.<sup>a</sup> The first to mount the wall were twenty<sup>b</sup> picked men, and after these came Sossius' centurions. The first wall was taken in forty days,<sup>c</sup> and the second in fifteen more; and some of the porticoes round the temple were burnt, which Herod accused Antigonus of

pp. 20-27, that the 27 years do not give 36 B.C. but Jan. (10th of Tebel), 37 B.C., reckoning 26 years and a fraction from Pompey's entry in the summer of 63 B.C., is invalidated by, among other things, the reference to the summer in § 473. (3) Josephus knew that the siege took place in the summer of 37 B.C. and was referring, rather vaguely, to a sabbatical year that began soon after the fall of Jerusalem, that is, in Oct. 37 B.C. This is not so improbable as it may seem at first. If the inhabitants of Jerusalem were distressed by famine in the summer of 37 B.C., they would not be able to lay in an extra supply of provisions for the latter part of the sabbatical year beginning in October—hence their desperation. To be sure, the 27 years of § 488 make a difficulty here, and we should have to assume that Josephus made a slip in arithmetic.

setting on fire, making an effort to draw upon him the hatred of the Jews by this charge.<sup>a</sup> And when the outer precincts of the temple and the Lower City had been captured, the Jews fled into the inner precinct of the temple and the Upper City<sup>b</sup>; and fearing that the Romans would prevent them from offering the daily sacrifices to God, they sent an embassy to beg that they would permit them to have only victims brought in for them; and this request he granted, in the belief that they would yield. But when he saw that none of the things he expected of them was being done, and that, on the contrary, they were resisting strongly for the sake of Antigonus' kingship, he attacked them and took the city by storm. And soon every quarter was filled with the blood of the slain,<sup>c</sup> for the Romans were furious at the length of the siege,<sup>d</sup> while the Jews on Herod's side were anxious not to leave a single adversary alive. And so they were slaughtered in heaps, whether crowded together in alleys and houses or seeking refuge in the temple; no pity was shown either to infants or the aged, nor were weak women spared, but even though the king sent word around, urging them to forbear, not one of them held his hand, but like madmen they fell upon persons of every age. It was then that Antigonus, without stopping to reflect either on his former or his present fortunes, came down from the castle, and fell at Sossius' feet.

<sup>d</sup> According to B.J. i. 351 the Jews sustained the siege into the fifth month, while Ant., below, § 487, appears to state that the city fell in the third month (of the siege) or even less (see above, § 476); but the point of time to which "the third month" refers in Ant. is by no means certain.

He, however, did not in the least pity him for suffering a change of fortune, but applauded him<sup>a</sup> unrestrainedly, and called him Antigone<sup>b</sup>; nevertheless he did not leave him unguarded, as a woman would have been, but had him put in chains and kept under guard.

(3) And Herod, after checking his enemies, took care also to check his foreign allies; for the crowd of strangers was bent on getting a view of the temple and the holy things in the sanctuary, and the king held them back, in some cases by appeals, in others by threats, and sometimes even by arms, for he regarded victory as something more bitter than defeat if any of the things forbidden to men's eyes should be seen by them. He also tried to prevent the plundering that went on throughout the city by strenuously arguing with Sossius that if the Romans emptied the city of its wealth and its men, they would leave him king of a wilderness, and that he would consider the sovereignty of the habitable world a poor recompense for the murder of so many citizens. And when Sossius said that he had been right to permit his soldiers this plundering in return for their labours in the siege, Herod replied that he himself would distribute rewards to each of them out of his own purse. In this way he purchased security for the rest of the city, and fulfilled his promise; for he gave splendid gifts to every soldier and proportionate gifts to their officers, while to Sossius himself he made most regal presents, so that all went away with a goodly share of wealth.

(4) <sup>a</sup> This calamity befell the city of Jerusalem during the consulship at Rome of Marcus Agrippa and Caninius <sup>b</sup> Gallus, in the hundred and eighty-fifth Olympiad, <sup>c</sup> in the third month, on the day of the Fast, as if it were a recurrence of the misfortune which came upon the Jews in the time of Pompey, for they were captured by Sossius on the very same day, twenty-seven years later. <sup>d</sup> And Sossius dedicated a golden crown to God and departed from Jerusalem, taking Antigonus in chains to Antony. <sup>e</sup> But Herod feared that if Antigonus were kept under guard by Antony and brought to Rome by him, he might plead the justice of his cause before the Senate and show that he was descended from kings while Herod was a commoner, and that his sons ought to reign by virtue of their lineage, even though he himself had committed offences against the Romans <sup>f</sup>; been considerable discussion of the actual date of the city's fall, and various attempts have been made to reconcile the conflicting data: see the detailed discussions (with bibliography) in Schürer i. 358 n. 11, Otto, Herodes, p. 33 n. 2, Zeitlin, MT, pp. 20-27, Laqueur, pp. 211-212 and Kugler, pp. 418-422. Here it may suffice to remark that while the year 37 B.C. is certain, the month cannot be determined with absolute certainty, but was probably July and not October. The former is more likely if we assume, with Otto, that the reference to the Day of Atonement (if ἡμερᾶς here means that fast day and not an earlier fast day in the calendar, e.g. the fast of the month Tammuz) is based on a popular tradition that sought to discredit Herod by making him responsible for invading the city on the very sacred Day of Atonement.

<sup>e</sup> Antony had left Italy for Greece in the autumn of 37 B.C. and soon after went to Antioch. It was here that Antigonus was brought to him in the winter of that year, cf. Wileken in PW i. 2420 and Tarn in CAH x. 54-55.

and because of this fear Herod gave Antony a large bribe and persuaded him to put Antigonus out of the way.<sup>a</sup> And when this was done, Herod was freed of his fear, and at the same time the rule of the Asamonaean line came to an end after a hundred and twenty-six years.<sup>b</sup> Theirs was a splendid and renowned house because of both their lineage and their priestly office, as well as the things which its founders achieved on behalf of the nation. But they lost their royal power through internal strife, and it passed to Herod, the son of Antipater, who came from a house of common people and from a private family that was subject to the kings.<sup>c</sup> Such, then, is the account we have received of the end of the Asamonaean line.

other king had suffered at the hands of the Romans," and then had him beheaded or had his throat cut (ἀπεσφαξεν).

<sup>b</sup> This would take us back to 163 or 162 B.C. Apparently Josephus is placing the beginning of the Hasmonaean dynasty at about the time when the last Oniad high priest, Onias IV, fled to Egypt, cf. Ant. xii. 385-388.

The last high priest mentioned in the Old Testament is Jaddua, a contemporary of Darius III and Alexander the Great (Neh. xii. 22). The high priest in the time of Seleucus IV c. 180 B.C. was Onias III. who figures prominently in 2 Maccabees (iii. 1 ff.).

APPENDIX B

For the succession of high priests in the intervening period of about 150 years we are almost wholly dependent upon Josephus, who is supplemented to only a slight extent by rabbinic tradition.

In Books XI and XII Josephus gives the following scheme of high priests, which in a later passage (Ant. xx. 261) he represents as based on written sources.

Onias I, successor of Jaddua, c. 300 B.C. (Ant. xi. 347).

Simon the Just, son of Onias I, time of Ptolemy I (Ant. xii. 43, 157).

Eleazar, brother of Simon the Just, time of Ptolemy II
(Ant. xii. 44).

Manasses, uncle of Eleazar (Ant. xii. 157).

Onias II, son of Simon the Just, time of Ptolemy IV,
V (Ant. xii. 157).

Simon II, son of Onias II, time of Ptolemy V and Antiochus III (Ant. xii. 224).

To this list we may tentatively add the name of Hezekiah, mentioned in Ap. i. 187 as a contemporary of Ptolemy I; he was either a high priest or assistant high priest (cf. Ant. xii. 9 note b).

There are two things about this scheme that strike one as peculiar. The first is that the young son of Simon I should have been preceded not only by his uncle Eleazar (which in itself is not remarkable) but also by his uncle's uncle Manasses.

The second point, which here chiefly concerns us, is Josephus' attribution of the epithet "the Just" or "the Righteous" (Heb. has-ṣaddiq) to the first priest named Simon (Heb. Sim'ôn). Other sources pretty clearly indicate that Simon the Just was not Simon I but Simon II, who flourished about a century later.

It is true that one rabbinic tradition makes Simon the Just a contemporary of Alexander the Great (scholion to Megillath Ta'anit with a parallel in Bab. Talmud, Yoma 69 a; this story is translated in Appendix C to vol. vi, pp. 517-518). But this variant of Josephus' story about the meeting of Jaddua and Alexander has little historical value, particularly so far as chronology is concerned; moreover it is quite possible that, as Zeitlin argues, the king in question was originally not Alexander but Antiochus III.

The other rabbinic (and Apocryphal) traditions point more clearly to the end of the third century B.C., not the end of the fourth, as the period when Simon the Just flourished. The relevant material may briefly be summarized as follows.

Ecclesiasticus or the Wisdom of Sirach celebrates, near the end of the book (ch. l), the greatness of the high priest "Simon, son of Onias" as he presides over a solemn ceremony in the temple. The author is clearly writing of a contemporary and of a scene which he himself has witnessed, and the description of the high priest's activity and influence best fits the high priest whom rabbinic sources call Simon the Just. Now the book of Ecclesiasticus on internal grounds and on the evidence of the prologue has been dated by almost all scholars at c. 200 B.C. Thus we have one support for the assumption that Simon the Just lived around 200 B.C. and not a century earlier. The identity of Sirach's Simon with Simon the Just would be further strengthened if we assumed with Derenbourg that the reference in l. 2 to the high priest's erection of a wall and double colonnade in the temple is to be connected with a passage in the latter of Antiochus III (Ant. xii. 141) saying that the Seleucid king permits the work on the temple to be completed

Again the rabbinic traditions preserved in Tosephta Soṭah xiii. 6-8, Jerus. Talmud Yoma 43 c, Bab. Talmud Yoma 39 a, b, Menahot 109 b about the high priest Onias who built a temple in Egypt state that he was the son of Simon the Just, and so indicate that Simon II, not Simon I, is meant.

Finally the succession of rabbinic authorities during the Hellenistic period as given in the Mishnah treatise Abot makes Simon the Just the first in a series of seven generations of teachers of whom Jose ben Joezer is in the third, Simeon ben Shetaḥ is in the fifth, and Hillel and Shammai in the seventh. Since Jose ben Joezer was a contemporary of the high priest Alcimus (161 B.C.), Simeon ben Shetaḥ a contemporary of Alexander Jannaeus and Alexandra, and Hillel and Shammai of Herod the Great, it is obvious that in this passage Simon the Just must be placed at c. 200 B.C.

Less unambiguous is the statement in Abot i. 2 that Simon the Just was one of the survivors (miš-šē'ârê) of the Great Assembly (kēneset hag-ge-dôlāh). The constitution and dates of the Great Assembly are problems which the vagueness of rabbinic tradition concerning this body makes it difficult to solve. Finkelstein has plausibly argued that the Great Assembly was the body convoked by Simon the Just c. 200 B.C. to promulgate certain measures by which the interests of the plebeians in the Jewish state would better be served than they had been in the pre-existing Gerousia. But in that case we should have to assume either that the Mishnah has here, as elsewhere, been chronologically inexact in making Simon the Just one of the “survivors” of this body or else that the word š'e'ârê "survivors" is a scribal error for râšê "heads"—an assumption that is made by Zeitlin. In any case the evidence of Ecclesiasticus taken together with the majority of rabbinic passages seems sufficient to warrant the assumption that Simon the Just lived c. 200 B.C. and that Josephus is mistaken in making him a contemporary of Ptolemy I.

The general problem of the civic rights and privileges enjoyed by the Jews in the Hellenistic-Roman Diaspora will be discussed in an appendix to the last volume of this translation. The present appendix is concerned only with the statements made by Josephus concerning the Jewish policies of the Seleucid rulers before Antiochus III (on the latter see the following appendix).

Only two early Seleucid kings are specifically mentioned in this connexion by Josephus : Seleucus I Nicator, the founder of the dynasty, and Antiochus II Theos.

With the former of these the following passages deal. Ant. xii. 119-124, Seleucus Nicator granted the Jews citizenship " in the cities which he founded in Asia and Lower Syria and in his capital Antioch itself, and declared them to have equal privileges with the Macedonians and Greeks who were settled in these cities, so that this citizenship of theirs remains to this very day ; and the proof of this is the fact that he gave orders that those Jews who were unwilling to use foreign oil should receive a fixed sum of money from the gymnasiarchs to pay for their own kind of oil ; and when the people of Antioch proposed to revoke this privilege, Mucianus, who was then governor of Syria, maintained it." Josephus goes on to say that similarly Titus and Vespasian refused to deprive the Alexandrian and Antiochian Jews of citizenship. Ap. ii. 39, " Our Jewish residents in Antioch are called Antiochenes, having been granted rights of citizenship by its founder Seleucus. Similarly, those at Ephesus and throughout the rest of Ionia bear the same name as the indigenous citizens, a right which they received from Alexander's successors (τῶν βασιλέων)." To these two passages we may add another which touches on the history of the Jews in Antioch before the Roman period, B.J. vii. 43-45, " But it was at Antioch that they specially congregated, partly owing to the greatness of that city, but mainly because the kings after Antiochus had enabled them to live there in security. For although Antiochus surnamed Epiphanes sacked Jerusalem and plundered the temple, his successors on the throne restored to the Jews of Antioch all such votive offerings as were made of bronze, to be laid up in their synagogue, and moreover, granted them citizen rights on an equality with the Greeks."

In trying to determine the historicity of the claim that Seleucus I gave the Jews citizenship and other privileges in Antioch and elsewhere, it is well to remember that both Ant. and Ap. which specifically make this claim are suspected of containing exaggerations of an apologetic nature to a greater extent than is B.J., which says nothing about Seleucus Nicator's concern for the Jews. Moreover in B.J.'s statement that the kings after Antiochus enabled the Jews to live at Antioch in security the Antiochus referred to is much more likely to be Antiochus III than Antiochus I, as Dr. Thackeray suggests in his note. The context indicates that Josephus is speaking of the friendly Jewish policy of all the Seleucids after Antiochus III, to which that of Antiochus Epiphanes formed the sole exception. Moreover an Antiochus without surname is much more likely to be the well-known Antiochus III the Great than the obscure Antiochus I.

Furthermore it is unlikely that there were enough Jews in Syria and Asia during the reign of Seleucus I to warrant special legislation on their behalf. It is true that Jews were beginning to settle in Egypt in considerable numbers soon after 300 B.C., but this does not seem to have been the case in Seleucid territory. Willrich and others have correctly pointed out that as late as the time of the Maccabees the Jewish settlement in Gilead was small enough to be brought en masse to Judaea. Other Apocryphal and rabbinic sources (see below) indicate that the Jewish community in Antioch first attained importance about 200 B.C. Nor is there reason to believe that the Jews of Palestine were of sufficient interest to Seleucus I for him to take favourable action toward their co-religionists in Syria and Asia. One might argue, to be sure, that the Jewish settlement in Babylonia was of some importance to Seleucus, but, as Tschirikower reminds us, there is no reason to believe that Josephus' sources made any reference to the Babylonian Jews of that period. Finally, it may be noted that in another passage, B.J. vii. 107 ff., which relates that Titus refused to expel the Jews from Antioch or to remove the bronze tablets on which their privileges were inscribed, there is no mention of Seleucus at all.

Another point to be considered is Josephus' statement in Ant. that proof of Seleucus I's interest in the Jews is the fact that he ordered the gymnasiarchs to give money for oil to those Jews who were unwilling to use pagan oil. That some of the Seleucid rulers did make such grants is proved by the inscription cited in one of the notes to this passage (p. 61 note b), and that the Jews of the Diaspora were reluctant to use pagan oil is shown by other passages in Josephus, cited in the same note, and by the discussion of this matter in the Bab. Talmud Abodah Zarah 36 a, b. The latter passage reports a controversy between the Hillelites and Shammaites, dating from about the end of the first century B.C. In a private communication Professor Louis Ginzberg expresses the opinion that many of the regulations discussed in this passage were "not new ordinances but reinforcements." He does not, however, conclude from the Talmudic statements that the Jews of the Diaspora abstained from the use of pagan oil as early as the time of Seleucus I. On the other hand, Krauss, who cites this and other Talmudic passages, expresses doubt that there was a considerable Jewish Diaspora in Syria in the time of the early Seleucid rulers. The rabbinic traditions about Antioch point to a separate golah (Diaspora) in the time of Onias III but not earlier. The grant of oil, therefore, is more plausibly to be ascribed to Antiochus III than to Seleucus I. Here, too, as in the case of other pro-Jewish enactments attributed by Josephus to the founders of the Ptolemaic and Seleucid dynasties, an apologetic motive is to be suspected. Whether Willrich is right in tracing this passage to Jason of Cyrene (on whose work 2 Maccabees is based) is a point to be discussed in another place.

We may now turn to another passage which some scholars have considered to refer to the Jewish policy of Antiochus II Theos (261-247 B.C.). In Ant. xii. 125-127 Josephus tells us that the Greeks of Ionia agitated against the Jews and petitioned Marcus Agrippa (during the years 16-13 B.C.) that "they alone might enjoy the citizenship which Antiochus, the grandson of Seleucus, called Theos by the Greeks, had given them, and claimed that if the Jews were to be their fellows, they should worship the Ionians' gods"; the passage goes on to say that after a hearing at which Nicolas of Damascus spoke as advocate of the Jews, Agrippa gave his opinion that it was not lawful for him to make a new rule. This passage must be considered in connexion with Ant. xvi. 27-60 which relates in greater detail how Nicolas successfully pleaded for the preservation of the privileges of the Jews in Ionia (chiefly matters of religious observance), which Agrippa was the more inclined to respect because of his friendship with Herod. In the latter passage it is clearly the privileges and edicts of toleration which the Romans had granted that are involved, not the civic rights or privileges which the Jews claimed to have received from the Seleucids. It is therefore reasonable to suppose that the phrase "the citizenship which Antiochus . . . Theos . . . had given them" refers to the democratic constitution set up in the cities of Asia by Antiochus II (attested by other Greek sources cited by Schürer) and that "them" refers to the Greeks and not to the Jews. If we take Ant. xii. 125-127 together with Ant. xvi. 27 ff., we see that the Ionian Greeks were attempting to have Agrippa revoke the edicts of toleration granted the Jews by the Romans, presumably in the time of Julius Caesar (cf. Ant. xiv. 190 ff.), which the anti-Jewish party claimed gave the Jews as great a measure of civic right as the Greeks had been enjoying as citizens since the time of Antiochus II. Here, as Wellhausen and Tscherikower remind us, Josephus confuses citizenship with privileges and grants of religious freedom. But he does not plainly say that it was Antiochus II who had given the Jews citizenship, though his language is slightly ambiguous, perhaps intentionally so. Nor should undue stress be placed on the word μετέχουσι in this passage (restored from Epitome for mss. μετέλθοσι), as though it implied participation by Jews and Greeks in citizenship, since its use in similar passages taken from Nicolas shows that it has the technical sense of "enjoy" (civic rights, etc.).

In conclusion, we may say that it is very improbable that the Jewish communities in Seleucid Syria and Asia were granted either citizenship or special privileges before the time of Antiochus III.

During the struggle for the possession of Palestine and Transjordan between Antiochus the Great and Ptolemy Epiphanes between 201 and 198 B.C. the majority of Jews seem to have sided with the Seleucids (see the works listed in Appendix E). Accordingly, Josephus tells us, Antiochus rewarded the Jews by extending certain privileges to them in respect of taxes, freedom of religion, maintenance of the temple cult and the like. The three documents which contain these royal grants and privileges are cited in xii. 138-153, and have naturally aroused a great deal of discussion among modern scholars, who have expressed divergent opinions about their genuineness and accuracy.

Before examining the documents in detail, it may be well to make some general observations about the nature of Hellenistic royal letters and Josephus' use of sources bearing on the position of the Jews in the Hellenistic Diaspora.

On the basis of such a collection as Welles' Royal Correspondence, which contains seventy-five texts principally from the Seleucid and Attalid kingdoms, and other collections of scores of papyri from the Ptolemaic period, it should be possible to determine with a fair degree of assurance whether the enactments ascribed to Seleucid and Ptolemaic kings by Josephus and other Hellenistic Jewish writers are obvious forgeries or not. (Incidentally, these same collections enable us to distinguish to some extent between Ptolemaic and Seleucid epistolary formulas.)

APPENDIX D

But the problem is more complicated than a mere matter of obvious forgery or obvious authenticity. We are dealing with material that does not fall into the category of the obvious. True, it is of some help to find that most of the royal letters and memoranda cited by Jewish writers closely conform to the pattern of authentic documents of this kind. But this conformity is only partial evidence of their genuineness. There is no reason why Hellenistic Jewish fabricators should not have made use of epistolary manuals, the existence of which is attested by ancient authors, to devise imaginary letters concerning the Jews, or have copied the royal decrees inscribed on stone and set up in the public squares of Hellenistic cities, or have altered genuine decrees by inserting favourable references to the Jews. On the other hand, there is no reason to condemn as wholly spurious a Ptolemaic or Seleucid decree cited by Josephus or an Apocryphal author merely because in some respects it deviates from the forms known to us from inscriptions and papyri. In the first place, we are not at present in a position to fix the chronological and local variations of the style of Hellenistic chancelleries with absolute accuracy. In the second place, we must allow for the occasional possibility that the king may have made informal additions to the formal letter drawn up by his official, or have issued a general statement as a temporary measure without bothering with the conventional forms, or, in the case of a Seleucid enactment, may have ordered that a form of religious toleration earlier extended to one minority group be applied to another group, actually quite different in culture, but supposed by the king to have the same system of sacrifices, cult restrictions and the like.

JEWISH ANTIQUITIES, XII

Such possibilities will be concretely illustrated below. At this point it may suffice to point out that the methods of Formgeschichte and Gattungsgeschichte cannot altogether replace the study of historical context and common sense.

As for the general reliability of such an apologist-historian as Josephus and of such theological historians as the authors of the Letter of Aristeas, 2 Maccabees and similar works in matters relating to the treatment of Jews by the successors of Alexander the Great, it will be freely admitted by a conscientious scholar that the documents cited by them must be treated with a certain amount of scepticism in view of the fact that these writers undoubtedly tend to exaggerate the friendliness shown toward the Jews by the earlier Ptolemies and Seleucids, and that Josephus (or his source) has, whether carelessly or deliberately, confused special privilege with citizenship and civic equality. But such proper scepticism should not make us unrealistic. A grant or ordinance which may justly be suspected of spuriousness if attributed to Ptolemy I or Seleucus I may have every probability of genuineness if attributed to Antiochus III. The historical setting and documentary parallels must be carefully evaluated.

In this connexion a word may be said about the view held by several scholars that most of the pro-Jewish royal Hellenistic decrees cited in Josephus, Aristeas and other Jewish works are of a piece with the pro-Jewish decrees ascribed to Persian kings in the biblical book of Ezra, and that both sets of documents are spurious. The remarkable similarity between them in such details as the immunities and privileges of temple officials, subventions to the sacrificial expenses, etc., is in itself no proof that the Hellenistic decrees are the invention of Jewish apologists. In the first place, recent independent investigation of Achaemenian policy by such competent Iranian scholars as H. H. Schaeder, has tended to support the arguments of earlier scholars, such as Eduard Meyer, that the Aramaic decrees in Ezra are genuine. In the second place, classical scholars, including some who have no special interest in Jewish history, have shown that in matters of imperial organization the Seleucids to a large extent followed the policy of the Achaemenians, so that it should not surprise us to find them granting the same privileges to the temple at Jerusalem as the Persian kings are said to have granted. The preceding arguments are, of course, secondary to the argument based on parallels found in genuine inscriptions of Hellenistic kings, which are mentioned below. A third point that might be mentioned is the fact that edicts of religious tolerance, in general similar to those ascribed to the later Seleucids, were granted by the early Roman emperors, whom we have no reason to consider as innovators in this respect.

Turning now to the documents cited in Ant. xii. 138-153, we shall first review briefly the views of those scholars who have expressed only a general or summary opinion about their genuineness (Schubart, Laqueur, Wellhausen, Niese, Graetz, Schürer, Klausner, Dubnow, Bevan, Meyer, Rostovtzeff), and then consider the arguments of those who have examined one or more of the three documents in some detail (Willrich, Büchler, Tschirikower, Zucker, Bickermann).

It is disappointing to find that so competent a scholar as Schubart in the course of a long and instructive discussion of Hellenistic royal letters dismisses the letters of Antiochus III to Ptolemy and Zeuxis as spurious without attempting to analyse them or to set up criteria of style applicable to them. Laqueur, dealing with a similarly broad subject, is a little more helpful in showing how the wholly negative criticism of Willrich and Kolbe (concerning the documents in 2 Maccabees) must be considerably restricted in the light of relevant parallels from inscriptions and the bearing of the specific situation.

Wellhausen, who holds that in general Josephus' statements about the policy of Hellenistic kings toward the Jews are to be suspected of exaggeration and apologetic tendencies, refers in detail only to Antiochus III's letter to Zeuxis on the transportation of two thousand Jewish families from Mesopotamia to Lydia and Phrygia, and questions its authenticity on the ground that the names of the colonists are not given. This objection will be considered below.

Niese's opinion is that the form and contents of all three documents are strongly suspect, but he gives no detailed argument except that Josephus obviously considers the Zeuxis letter to have been written after the conquest of Jerusalem, whereas in fact it must have been written before this. He also refers to Willrich's criticisms (see below), which, however, he says are only negatively valid, presumably questioning Willrich's view that the documents are Jewish inventions of Roman date. Niese suggests that the letter to Zeuxis was put out by the Jews of Phrygia and Lydia who wished to base their claim to civic equality with the Macedonian katoikoi on the alleged colonization by Antiochus III ; on this see below.

APPENDIX D

Graetz seems to accept the genuineness of two of the three documents, assuming with Grotius that the privileges ascribed therein to Antiochus are identical with the royal φιλένθρωπα mentioned in 2 Macc. iv. 11 as having been granted to "John, father of Eupolemus." The second document (§ 146) he admits is of doubtful genuineness, but does not explain why.

Schürer, whose work is concerned primarily with the period after Antiochus III, only incidentally mentions the king's grants to the temple and cult, and assumes that they are historical.

Klausner takes for granted the authenticity of all the documents and confines himself, in citing evidence, to the argument that the repair of the temple mentioned in Sirach (see Appendix B) indicates the interest of Antiochus in the temple.

Dubnow also accepts the three documents as authentic, remarking in a footnote that Niese and Wellhausen have questioned their genuineness but arguing that they should not be wholly rejected merely because certain details are improbable. He further ventures the rash suggestion that Josephus has taken the documents from Polybius, who is quoted in the preceding sections of Ant. xii.

Bevan, as usual, takes a sensible view of the problem and balances the probabilities. His brief comments are worth quoting in full. "I incline to doubt, with Willrich (Judaica, p. 58) and Büchler (Tobiaden u. Oniaden, p. 143 f.), the genuineness of the letters of Antiochus III, given by Joseph. Arch. xii. § 138 f., not so much because of any impossibility in them (which I do not think Willrich or Büchler succeeds in making out), but because of the readiness with which such documents were forged in post-Maccabaeon times (see Willrich, Juden u. Griechen, Judaica, passim). If, however, they are not genuine, they are forged by some one familiar with the history of the time and the style of such rescripts. He knew of Zeuxis, the governor of Lydia (perhaps from Polybius), and Ptolemy, the son of Thraseas, the governor of Coele-Syria. (In objecting that Ptolemy was made governor in 218, Juden u. Griechen, p. 40, Willrich is thinking of the date in which he was in the Egyptian service, Polyb. v. 65, 3. That he deserted to the Seleucid in 218 with Ceraeas and Hippolochus, Polyb. v. 70, 10, is a conjecture only. When he was made governor of Coele-Syria there is absolutely nothing to show.) He is also right in exhibiting the Jews as friendly to Antiochus. The detail of the Egyptian garrison, not mentioned in our fragments of Polybius, may therefore be taken as true. That Antiochus should in such circumstances have shown some favours to the Jews and made presents to the Temple is in itself extremely likely." After reading this, one is inclined to ask the judicious historian of the Seleucid dynasty why the privileges which he admits Antiochus most probably granted to the Jews cannot be just those recorded in the letters cited by Josephus? In other words Bevan seems less doubtful of the genuineness of the documents than he himself claims to be.

Eduard Meyer, who has no marked sympathy with the Jews either of antiquity or modern times, objects to what he calls the unjustified doubts of the authenticity of the documents expressed by Schubart, and charges that the doubting modern critics of Josephus cannot "feel themselves" into the ancient situation. As a parallel to the restrictions on foreigners approaching the temple precinct mentioned in the second document, he cites the well-known Greek inscription of Roman times (OGIS 598, cf. Ant. xv. 417), μηθένα ἀλλογενῇ εἰσπορεύεσθαι ἐντὸς τοῦ περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν τρυφάκτον καὶ περιβόλον, κτλ. Meyer admits that Josephus exaggerates in saying that Antiochus published his programma throughout the entire kingdom.

Rostovtzeff does not commit himself about the genuineness of the letter to Zeuxis, which alone he notices, but remarks that its style is singularly like the letter of Antiochus to the city of Amyzon, and adds that "there is no doubt that the letter gives us exactly the normal procedure when the Seleucids founded a military colony." The extant fragments of the Amyzon inscription (Welles Nr. 40) read, Ἀμυζονέων χαίρειν—τὸ ἱερὸν ἄστυλον—βασιλείως εἴροισιν—καὶ μηθεὶ ἐνοχλεῖν ὑμῖς—ἔρρωσθε. It must be added that the attribution of the Amyzon inscription to Antiochus III is not certain but probable. Welles takes it to be the writing of a royal official of the king when the latter was active in Caria before the Syrian campaign of 201 B.C.

In considering the more detailed treatments of other recent scholars, we shall find it most convenient to take each of the three documents separately, first reporting the negative criticisms of Willrich and Büchler, and then giving the counter-arguments of Tcherikower, Zucker and Bickermann, and the present writer's as well.

I. The Letter to Ptolemy (xii. 138-144)

Willrich in some places expresses the opinion that Josephus has taken the Seleucid decrees from such

JEWISH ANTIQUITIES, XII

apologists as Jason of Cyrene and Pseudo-Hecataeus, and in other places points out that some of the enactments attributed to Antiochus III and earlier kings really date from Roman times; but his argument that Jason of Cyrene and Pseudo-Hecataeus wrote in the first century B.C. is far from convincing. The main points of his argument against the authenticity of the Ptolemy letter are as follows. The addressee, Ptolemy son of Thraseas, is known to have been governor of Coele-Syria before 218 B.C. but not later. (This argument has been answered by Bevan, see above.) The pro-Jewish provisions of the letter bear a suspicious resemblance to those attributed to Ptolemy Philadelphus in Aristeas and to Persian kings in the book of Ezra. (This argument too has been broadly dealt with in the first part of the present Appendix.) The porticoes of the temple which the king offers to have repaired indicate that the temple of Herod is really in the writer's mind. The poll-tax was not known in the Seleucid kingdom and was first introduced under Quirinius. (On this point see note a to § 142 on p. 74 and also the discussions of Tschirikower and Bickermann below.) The return of Jewish captives is questionable, for it is difficult to see how Jews could have been taken off if the Egyptian garrison in Jerusalem was forced to surrender; this section, therefore, is to be suspected of imitating the reference in Aristeas to the freeing of Jewish captives in Egypt by Ptolemy Philadelphus. (Incidentally, the historicity of the latter story is not wholly disproved by the recent studies of slavery in Ptolemaic Egypt by W. L. Westermann and others.) A final objection raised by Willrich, in common with some other scholars, is that there is no mention of the Jewish high priest in the letter, as might be expected in an official document.

An even more detailed and extended attack on the genuineness of the letter is made by Büchler, who not only takes account of the criticisms of Wellhausen and Willrich but in some cases improves on them or replaces them by other criticisms. Büchler's arguments are ingenious and elaborate, but some of his statements are inaccurate, and his unsystematic skipping from document to document combined with extreme dialectical subtlety results in some confusion of intention. In addition to these defects is the artificiality of treatment involved in his fixed notion that most of the Hellenistic decrees cited in Josephus reflect the Jewish-Samaritan controversies of the first century B.C. The substance of his theory about this particular document seems to be that a Jewish apologist writing in Herodian times has altered an original Samaritan forgery which ascribed to Antiochus III certain grants made to the Samaritan temple on Mt. Gerizim. The following are the salient points of his argument. It is noteworthy that in the section taken from Polybius that precedes the letter to Ptolemy and relates the conquest of Coele-Syria by Antiochus there is special emphasis on Samaria (not apparent to the present writer), and one may infer that §§ 135-136 originally dealt with the conquest of Samaria rather than of Judaea: the former was of greater military importance than Jerusalem, and also had an Egyptian garrison. The reference in § 141 to the importing of wood for the temple is more appropriate to Samaria than to Jerusalem. On the other hand, Büchler continues, the letter makes the city and temple identical, which does not fit the Samaritan theory, since the fortress of Samaria was separate from the temple on Mt. Gerizim except in the time of Gabinius, cf. Ant. xiv. 100. Nor was the senate (γερονσία) of Samaria connected with priests and Levites as in the decree. The assurance of religious and political freedom for the Jews given in § 142 pre-supposes that restrictions of this kind had been imposed on the Jews shortly before, but no such restrictions are likely to have been imposed by either the Ptolemies or the Seleucids before Antiochus IV Epiphanes. After going through the list of persecutions in the period after Antiochus Epiphanes, Büchler finds that the implied restrictions and the damage to the temple resulting from the siege must have been those due to Pompey in 63 B.C. He therefore concludes that the letter reflects the liberal enactments of Julius Caesar, who, for example, remitted Jewish taxes for a time. As for the Jewish captives mentioned in the letter, they were probably those taken to Rome by Pompey; their release may have been due to Mark Antony, who is said by Dio Cassius to have freed the captives taken by Cassius. It is no accident, says Büchler, that the grants actually made by Julius Caesar were ascribed by the Jewish author of the decree to Antiochus III, since he meant the document to be an answer to the Samaritans who boasted that Antiochus IV had shown special favour to their temple on Mt. Gerizim. The reference to the repair of the porticoes of the temple is to the Herodian temple, but this preserved the architectural features of a much earlier time; so too the Levites had earlier enjoyed special privileges. The omission of the name of the high priest is a characteristic of forged decrees ascribed by their Jewish authors to pagan rulers, as is seen from the Aramaic documents in Ezra, which were taken as a model by Hellenistic Jewish apologists. (See the comment on Willrich and the first part of this Appendix, and on Bickermann, below.) Perhaps, Büchler adds, the high priest is not mentioned here because Hyrcanus II did not enjoy exemption from taxation. The mention of the senate under the name of γερονσία points to the Egyptian origin of the decree.

APPENDIX D

Let us now consider the counter-arguments of Tscherikower, Zucker and Bickermann (the last of whom has made so thorough an investigation of the letter to Ptolemy that he has left little to add).

Tscherikower points out that Antiochus III's liberality to the temple is inherently probable in view of the tolerance shown by Ptolemies and Seleucids to the religions of minority groups; as an example of this he cites the decree of a King Antiochus concerning the temple of Zeus (= Baal) in Baetocaece in Syria (OGIS 262 = Welles 70). This decree is dated by Welles c. the end of the first century B.C. and is translated by him as follows. " King Antiochus to Euphemus, greeting. The inclosed memorandum has been issued. See then that its provisions are carried out as far as concerns you. Report having been brought to me of the ' power ' of the god Zeus of Baetocaece, it has been decided to grant him for all time the place whence the ' power ' of the god issues, the village of Baetocaece—formerly the property of Demetrius the son of Demetrius and grandson of Mnaseas, . . . of the Apamean satrapy—with all its property and possessions according to the existing surveys and with the harvest of the present year, so that the revenue from this may be spent by the priest chosen by the god in the customary manner for the monthly sacrifices and the other things which increase the dignity of the temple, and also that there may be held each month on the fifteenth and thirtieth days fairs free from taxation; (it has been decided further) that the temple should be inviolable and the village exempt from billeting, as no objection has been raised; that anyone who should violate any of the above provisions should be held guilty of impiety; and that copies (of this memorandum) should be inscribed on a stone stele and placed in the same temple. It will be necessary then to write to the usual officials so that these provisions may be carried out."

Here a word of caution is in place concerning Tscherikower's use of this decree. While it is of value in furnishing a model of the Seleucid chancellery style in such matters, the reader may be reminded that it was probably issued by a Seleucid king who was in greater need of support from a local community and therefore more anxious to conciliate it than was the case with Antiochus III who was dealing with the former subjects of his Ptolemaic rival. However, as Bevan has remarked, it is very likely that Antiochus III made an effort to please the Jews, and if he did so, would have chosen some such means as his successor did in trying to please the people of Baetocaece.

Tscherikower further argues, convincingly enough, that the tax-exemption and return of the captives mentioned in the letter to Ptolemy were in keeping with the policy of Hellenistic kings, and have a parallel in Antiochus III's treatment of Lysimachia in Thrace (cf. Appian, Syria 1). This, then, would make unnecessary Büchler's assumption that these grants were originally made by Julius Caesar and Mark Antony. Against Willrich's objection that poll-taxes were not known in the Seleucid kingdom under Antiochus III Tscherikower argues that we know too little about Seleucid taxes to be dogmatic on this point (see also Bickermann below); moreover, even if it were true that the Jews at that time paid taxes only through the high priest, as Willrich claims, there is no good reason why the Seleucid king should not have intervened on occasion. These considerations seem to dispose of some of the chief objections raised against the general trustworthiness of the letter to Ptolemy.

Like Eduard Meyer and Tscherikower, Zucker also finds support for the historicity of the documents in parallels from Hellenistic decrees, e.g. SEG ii. 663. He notes that in distinction from the Persian decrees quoted in Ezra vi-vii, Antiochus' grant of exemption from taxes for the gerousia and scribes is something new: he further supposes that from the earlier Seleucid point of view the gerousia corresponded to the boulē of the Hellenistic city-states, but that in the time of Antiochus III the Jewish gerousia must have been a council of temple officials assisting the high priest, something like the sacred collegium of the Roman empire, hence a ἱερὰ βουλή. Particularly interesting is Zucker's citation of a verse from Judith (xi. 13-14) which refers to the authority of the gerousia over the temple revenues. In citing the Baetocaece decree as a parallel, he points out that in it tax-exemption is granted for only one year, so that Antiochus III's grant for three years is exceptional.

JEWISH ANTIQUITIES, XII

Zucker concludes by expressing the opinion, quite plausible in the present writer's judgment, that the tax-exemption granted to the temple officials was a tradition inherited by the Seleucids from the Persian kings.

To Bickermann we owe the most complete and valuable study of the letter to Ptolemy. Some of the arguments he advances in defence of its genuineness have been anticipated by one or another of the scholars mentioned above; accordingly only the more important of the new arguments he has given will be summarized, and no attempt will be made to include all the textual comments, some of them very useful, which he has made.

Bickermann regards the letter to Ptolemy as the "Seleucid charter of Jerusalem," and is chiefly interested in trying to show its political motivation and results. He first stresses the importance of the Jews' services to Antiochus III in furnishing him with provisions, as is indicated by a passage in Polybius, v. 70. 5 (218 B.C.), and in helping to dislodge the Egyptian garrison from the citadel N.W. of the temple, as is indicated by Porphyry ap. Jerome on Daniel xi. 15, "For a long time Antiochus with the help of the Jews besieged the garrison established by Scopas in the citadel of Jerusalem."

He then shows that in the first part of the letter the friendly acts of the Jews are arranged in crescendo order, which is in accord with good chancery style, cf. Welles Nrs. 22, 71; furthermore the expression of royal gratitude for such services is a feature of official Hellenistic style. Antiochus shows his gratitude in two ways, by restoring the city and by repopulating it. As parallels to these acts, Bicker-mann cites the passage in Appian (see above) and the collection of texts published by Holleaux in BCH, 1924, pp. 30 ff.

Dealing with the "dispositions" in the second part of the letter, Bickermann calls attention to the fact that σέρταξις in § 140 is used in the sense of "aid," "contribution" (cf. OGIS 1. 13), whereas in Ptolemaic Greek the word means "salary"; thus he disposes of the theory of Büchler and Reinach that the document is a fabrication of Egyptian Jews. That Antiochus III should have given money for the temple instead of gifts in kind, as did Darius and Artaxerxes according to Ezra vi-vii (here Bickermann has made a slip; Artaxerxes gave money, not gifts in kind, according to Ezra vii. 15 ff.) is in keeping with the Hellenistic practice of adaeratio.

On the problem of taxation Bickermann, who is a leading authority on the subject, admits that we have no direct evidence for the poll-tax in Seleucid times (see above), but points out that this tax is named among the sources of income of the satraps (read "kings"?) in Pseudo-Aristotle's Economics 1346 a, a work which reflects conditions in Asia under the Diadochi. He also argues that there is nothing remarkable in the fact that Antiochus' letter is addressed to the governor of Coele-Syria and not directly to the Jews, since a number of instances are known of the former practice though it is less usual than the latter; he refers to Welles Nr. 9 and to 1 Macc. xi. 32, 2 Macc. xi. 22.

Bickermann reconstructs the political situation as follows. In conformity with the principles of Greek public law Antiochus III everywhere regulated the status of reconquered cities. After taking Jerusalem he did the same, and rewarded the Jews for the services they had rendered him in his war with Ptolemy Epiphanes. In the Greek polis re-establishment of the civic constitution meant autonomy, more or less. In the case of Jerusalem it meant royal recognition of the authority of the Jewish constitution which was nothing else than the law of Moses. From this followed such enactments as the interdiction of access to the temple for non-Jews. In making these grants to the Jews Antiochus was following the example of his Hellenistic predecessors, who in turn had followed the precedent set by the Persian kings. Thus the letter to Ptolemy formed the Seleucid "charter" of Jerusalem, and was probably renewed by Seleucus IV and Antiochus IV, but eventually revoked by the latter.

More speculative is Bickermann's treatment of the gifts made by Antiochus to the temple. He distinguishes between the daily sacrifices made on behalf of the Jewish people and paid for by them, and the burnt-offering sacrificed on behalf of the king and paid for by him. But, argues Bickermann, Antiochus' contribution amounted to about twice as much as was needed for the royal sacrifices according to Talmudic estimates; hence we may suppose that the king not only paid the expense of the daily sacrifice made in his name but also some of the expense of the Tamid sacrifice made on behalf of the Jews. For Hellenistic parallels to such contributions he refers to Holleaux's collection of texts in  BCH , 1924.

One more important detail is interestingly discussed by Bickermann, namely the absence of the high priest's name in the letter to Ptolemy. He points out that the Jewish state, being an aristocracy, was represented by the gerousia in foreign relations. The high priest is not mentioned in the Persian decrees or in the Seleucid documents quoted in 1 and 2 Maccabees before the time of Jonathan, whereas the gerousia continues to be mentioned beside the high priests in documents from the later Hasmonaean period. With this interpretation of the status of the Jewish senate compare that of Zucker above; the two views are not necessarily in conflict, since both Zucker and Bickermann would presumably recognize that in the time of Antiochus III the high priest shared authority over the temple with the gerousia. Bickermann also remarks that in distinction from the Persian kings, who exempted all the clerics of the temple from taxation, Antiochus III limited tax-exemption to the priests and two classes of Levites—a limitation that he believes to be in accord with the policy of Hellenistic rulers toward the oriental clergy.

The reader has had placed before him the chief arguments for and against the genuineness of all or most of the first document ascribed to Antiochus III by Josephus. Although certainty is not likely to be attained in such a matter, I believe that the weight of evidence supports those scholars who accept Antiochus' letter to Ptolemy as an actual decree issued by the king soon after his conquest of Coele-Syria.

II. The Ritual Interdictions (xii. 145-146)

More of a puzzle in some ways than the letter to Ptolemy is the brief section purporting to be a proclamation (πρόγραμμα), which Antiochus III published "throughout the entire kingdom" and in which non-Jews are forbidden to enter the temple enclosure, and all persons are forbidden to bring into Jerusalem the flesh or hides of horses, mules, asses, etc., under penalty of a fine.

The mere prohibition of entrance to the temple enclosure is not remarkable; such a prohibition, under penalty of death, existed in Roman times, as is proved not only by the statement of Josephus in Ant. xv. 417 but also by the discovery of copies of the original inscription erected in the temple precinct (see above on Eduard Meyer and cf. Schürer ii. 272 and Iliffe in QSDAP vi. 1936. 1-3). On the fines to be paid to Jewish communities for violation of their religious statutes see note b on p. 76 of this volume. But that the Jews at this time or any time should have objected to the bringing into Jerusalem of horses, asses, mules, etc., alive or dead is incredible. This fact makes it impossible to believe that the document is a Jewish fabrication, as some scholars have claimed; why should any Jew, however zealous for the prestige of his temple and sacred city, have invented such an unlikely detail? It has been pointed out that the Jews did not eat such animals; it should be added that they did not use them as sacrificial animals either, so that there would have been no point in forging a prohibition of their importation into Jerusalem, especially when a good many non-Jews must have known that such animals were permitted to serve as beasts of burden in the city.

Büchler's theory that the document reflects the Jewish-Samaritan controversies of the first century B.C. over the respective merits of the temple in Jerusalem and the temple on Mt. Gerizim is not very convincing. Against this complicated assumption that Josephus' Jewish source has recast an original Samaritan polemic seeking to show that Antiochus Epiphanes, the desecrator of the temple in Jerusalem, had been very scrupulous in respecting the Levitical prescriptions of the Gerizim temple, it may be argued that such an exaggerated Samaritan claim is inherently improbable, and that even if such a claim had been made by a Samaritan writer, it is difficult to believe that a Jewish apologist would have been naive enough to make the imaginary restrictions apply to Jerusalem.

Tscherikower, who upholds the genuineness of the document, attempts to account for the curious restriction as well as for the statement about the publishing of the proclamation throughout the entire kingdom by assuming that the decree has been preserved in an imperfect and incomplete form. This is probably true, but does not quite satisfactorily explain the statement about the importation of the animals. I venture to suggest another explanation, on the assumption that the document is not a fabrication. My suggestion is that Antiochus gave orders to the official in charge of such matters to draw up a statement protecting the sanctity of the temple, as he had presumably been requested to do by some of the Jewish leaders in touch with the Seleucid court; but this official, being ignorant of the exact nature of Jewish ritual, simply chose a formula that was in use for the protection of the cults of various Hellenistic and Syrian cities, and slightly altered it to make it apply to Jerusalem in spite of the fact that it did not wholly fit the requirements of the Jews. For an example of such a Hellenistic decree we may cite an inscription from Ialysus in Rhodes (Dittenberger, Sylloge, 3rd ed. 355 = Michel, Recueil 436, referred to by Willrich), which prohibits the bringing into the temple or temple precincts any horse, ass, mule, etc. It is also possible, assuming the imperfection and incompleteness of the present text, that the document originally prohibited the importation of all animals on the Sabbath, and that this enactment has, as a result of text corruption, been altered in Josephus' source to a prohibition of the importation of ritually unclean animals at any time.

III. The Letter to Zeuxis (xii. 148-153)

The same difference of opinion that exists among modern scholars about the genuineness of Antiochus III's letter to Ptolemy and his proclamation concerning the temple and Jerusalem is found in their views concerning the letter to Zeuxis, in which Antiochus commands that two thousand Jewish families be transported from Mesopotamia and Babylonia and settled in the rebellious provinces of Lydia and Phrygia to guard the interests of the Seleucid government, and at the same time directs that they be provided with houses and land and be exempted from taxes on produce for ten years.

Willrich objects that this document is wholly in the style of the Jewish apologist Pseudo-Hecataeus, the assumed source of the passage in Aristeas §§ 12-13 which states that Ptolemy I transported Jews from Palestine to Egypt and settled them in garrisons there. As we have pointed out in notes to this volume, recent investigations by Hans Lewy and others have shown that some of the fragments attributed to Pseudo-Hecataeus are probably from the works of the genuine Hecataeus, a non-Jewish historian of the early third century B.C., and are in accord with historical fact. Moreover we know from Aramaic and Greek papyri that Jews were actually taken into military service in Persian and Ptolemaic Egypt. Willrich also suggests that the letter to Zeuxis has as its historical basis Herod's settling of Jewish colonists from Babylonia in Batanaea, cf. Ant. xvii. 23-25. In this case as in other arguments against the genuineness of Hellenistic decrees quoted by Josephus, Willrich seems to be eating his critical cake and having it too. If the letter to Zeuxis is an apologetic Jewish invention modelled on Pseudo-Hecataeus, who must have written before 100 B.C., it cannot also be based on an incident that took place late in Herod's reign. Incidentally the circumstances of the Herodian settlement of eastern Jews in Batanaea were rather different from those of the alleged settlement by Antiochus III; in the former case a military group of only six hundred men was involved. But even if the circumstances were more nearly alike, the fact that a quasi-Jewish king like Herod transported Jews from Babylonia (they were originally from Babylonia but later settled at Antioch) to Batanaea is no proof that Antiochus III did not transport Jews from Babylonia to Lydia and Phrygia.

Niese, who strongly suspects the genuineness of the letter to Zeuxis, suggests that it was circulated by the Jews of Asia Minor who wished to base their claim to civic equality with the Macedonians on their colonization there by Antiochus III. But the question remains, even supposing that the Jews of Asia Minor wished to make propaganda of this sort, how did they come to be in Lydia and Phrygia in considerable numbers if Antiochus III did not settle them there ? Niese is correct, to be sure, in pointing out that Josephus is mistaken in making it appear that the transportation and settlement took place after Antiochus III's conquest of Coele-Syria in 201-198 B.C.

Nor can we give much weight to the argument of Wellhausen and Willrich that if the letter were genuine it would specify the names of the colonists and the localities in Lydia and Phrygia where they were to be settled. We must remember, as Tscherikower remarks, that Antiochus was campaigning in the East (in 206/5 B.C.) and was presumably writing in haste.

It cannot be denied that there is room for suspicion of Jewish apologetic retouching of the original letter, as in § 150 where Antiochus refers to the Jews' "piety to God" (but see the note on this phrase), and to the testimony of his forefathers concerning the loyalty of the Jews ; but even these complimentary allusions may be genuine, as part of the conventional documentary style (see Bickermann's treatment of this general subject).

It seems to me, then, that there is no convincing evidence against the genuineness of Antiochus III's letter to Zeuxis.
